Yanz started the game but only lasted 2-1/3 innings, giving up six earned runs on seven hits. Thompson then pitched 4-2/3, giving up four hits and no runs with six strikeouts.

Mickey Blount came on in the eighth to give up five runs on one hit and did not record an out. David Johnson then came on to finish the game, giving up two runs on four hits.

Chris Allen (3-2) allowed one hit in two scoreless innings for the win. Mickey Blount (1-1) took the loss.

Hendrix picked up his 200th career hit as a Cat, making him just the sixth player to reach that mark.

In the opener, Cory Bohanan went 3-for-5 with three RBIs to lead the Cyclones.

K-State jumped out to an early lead when Jason Bichelmeyer's triple drove in two runs. Bichelmeyer then scored on an error by Cox, and the Wildcats led 3-0.

The Cyclones got one run back in the first, then rallied for five in the second. Bohanan drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single.

Iowa State took advantage of an error and a wild pitch and added four more runs in the fifth. Jones drove in two with a single.

Bichelmeyer finished with three RBIs going 1-4 in the contest.

Darrin DeReu homered for Iowa State to lead off the seventh, with his fourth homer of the year.

Jeff Sebring (4-7) got the win. Chris Traylor (4-2) took the loss.

women's tennis team set to play at ncaa tourney

Shane McCormick
staff writer

A successful season brought on post season rewards for K-State women's tennis players.

The Big 8 Conference announced its annual women's singles and doubles individual tennis champions. Champions and runner-ups were decided by seasonal round-robin competition.

K-State had two singles players and a pair of doubles teams honored in this year's awards.

Senior Karina Kuregian was named Big 8 No. 2 Singles Champion in the release. Although she was happy with the reward, Kuregian said it was not her specific goals for the season.

"My goals was for the team to do well, win the Big 8 and make it to Regionals," she said. "Being an individual champion really wasn't a specific goal for me. It wasn't an issue."

Kuregian finished as the runner-up at No. 1 singles last year. Diagnosed with Graves Disease early this season, Kuregian said she was worried about getting the chance to play.

"Yes, I was a little bit worried that I might not be able to play in my last semester," she said. "I thought that I would not be playing."

Kuregian finished the season with a tremendous 14-1 overall record in singles action. She was 5-0 in the Big 8 at No. 2 singles.

Sophomore Dinah Watson was also rewarded for her successful singles campaign. Watson was named runner-up at No. 5 singles.

Battling a shoulder problem, Watson dropped her first two matches. After sitting out several duals to rest the shoulder, Watson returned with a vengeance.

Watson rolled nine-consecutive wins before losing at the No. 5 spot against Oklahoma. Watson was defeated by Tamsin Wainwright, who was named the No. 5 singles champion.

The loss to Wainwright was Watson's only in the Big 8, as she posted a 6-1 record in the conference. She finished the season with a 10-3 overall record.

Each of K-State's top-two doubles teams earned runner-up honors.

At No. 2 doubles, sophomore Yana Dorodnova and junior Karen Nicholson were named runner-up. The duo finished the season at 8-6 overall and 5-2 in Big 8 play.

At No. 1 doubles, Kuregian teamed up with sophomore Lena Pilipchak to earn runner-up honors.

"I don't think we played consistent throughout the year, but we played pretty good," Kuregian said. "We had a bad loss to KU, but we learned a lot from it for our other matches."

Kuregian and Pilipchak finished the season 11-5 overall and 6-1 in Big 8. The only loss for the duo in conference play came against Kansas team of Kylie Hunt and Jenny Atkerson. Hunt and Atkerson won the No. 1 doubles championship this season.

Dinah Watson serves during a doubles match in a meet against Iowa State at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The tennis team will travel to Lawrence this weekend to take part in the NCAA Finals.

Team finishes season in 3rd place

John Berggren
staff writer

The K-State rugby team wrapped up its season last Saturday and Sunday, finishing third in the Western Tournament Union Playoffs in Dallas.

After going 14-4 in regular season play and going undefeated in its merit games, the team was given an automatic berth to compete in the Westerns.

The top two teams in the Westerns go on to national but K-State fell short after losing its first game to Queen City from Denver, 32-8. The team, however, battled back to win its second game, 17-5.

Despite not going to nationals, team treasurer and organizer Tim Harrold said his team had a great season.

"We started practicing in August, and the season started in September," Harrold said. "We had a two-month dead period because of the cold weather."

"It was the first time in five or six years that my team had even got to go to Westerns. All the hard work paid off. The only bad thing is that we didn't get to go to nationals."

Harrold said despite not going to nationals, his team had a good showing at the Westerns.

"Everybody played the best we could," Harrold said. "The best teams out of the Union won, and they were just hungrier for the win than we were."

The team did so well in its region that even its competitors were left as admirers.

"One of our competitors from Wichita had five of its team members come down to Dallas just to watch us play," Harrold said. "They were also former alumni from our team."

It was the first time in five or six years that my team had even got to go to Westerns. All the hard work paid off.

Man caught in connection with Miami linebacker murder

Associated Press

MIAMI — A phone tip led to the arrest of a 24-year-old man in the murders last month of Miami reserve linebacker Marlin Barnes and friend Timwanika Lumpkins in a campus apartment.

The 22-year-old students were beaten to death with a shotgun by 24-year-old Labrant Deshawn Dennis, Lumpkins' former boyfriend and father of her 3-year-old daughter, police said Wednesday.

The murders were acts of domestic violence and not related to campus security at the University of Miami, state attorney Kathy Fernandez Rundle said.

The shotgun was recovered from a culvert under Interstate 95 just north of Miami, following the tip Monday to Crime Stoppers of Dade County, Carlos Alvarez of Metro-Dade police said.

"I am glad that there's been an arrest," Barnes' mother Charlie Postell said. "But that doesn't make it any better for me, because my son ... I'll never see him again."

Barnes and Lumpkins were killed early April 13 in Barnes' campus apartment. Barnes' body was found by a roommate, and Lumpkins died after being rushed to a hospital.

He had been expected to compete for a starting job next season.

Dennis — whom police described as a cooperative witness with an alibi — was arrested without incident at his home Tuesday night after the shotgun was recovered, Alvarez said.

Dennis was being held at Dade County jail charged with two counts of first-degree murder, burglary and criminal mischief.

REVIEW

Artist employs spirited colors, textural collages

Russell Fortmeyer

contributing writer

The walls are coming alive in the Willard Gallery. They're not literally becoming living organisms, but Laura Harrison's artwork of spirited colors and textural collages brings the flat, white gallery walls a new sense of vitality.

Harrison's work is part of a bachelor of fine arts exhibition, which also features Jill Jernigan's ceramics, showing until Friday at the Willard Gallery.

Harrison, senior in fine arts with an emphasis in painting, said she finds working with collage more exciting than conventional painting.

"It helps me with ideas," Harrison said. Many of Harrison's works convey personal meanings through the use of found objects that project light on the individual.

In her work "Joe," oil and found objects, she composes the canvas with various items referring to "Joe" as a plumber: expandable tubes, strange-looking tools and pipe.

The purple hue of the painting creates a strong background for the bright colors of the objects to be displayed. Looking closely at the painting, one discovers smaller, foreign objects like Lego blocks, hair clips and knives that lend a very unsettling, strangely humorous quality to the work.

Who is Joe, and why does he have these items in his possession? Harrison said she shops for most of the items she uses for her collages, but some of her work includes objects given to her by friends.

Departing radically from most of the work in the show, Harrison's piece entitled "Jacqueline" is a monochromatic, square work, which on initial reaction appears quite plain.

Actually, the piece is built of crinkled tin foil painted with ordinary burnt sienna oil paint.

The effect, however, is extraordinary. The work, referring to former first lady (and pop-culture icon) Jackie Kennedy-Onassis, is like an elegant topographical map, perhaps with high and low reference points to this very genteel woman's life.

The extreme textural quality does much justice to this famous woman.

The work could have overindulged in familiar images or conventional references. It instead opts for a softer, classier depiction using minimalist technique.

Harrison renders other personalities so remarkably that one wonders why there are no works that refer to herself.

"I'm not a figurative person," Harrison said. "I've never done a collage of myself. I'm too personal for that — too private."

Harrison plans on attending graduate school at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Penn. to receive her master's degree in arts and administration. She said she would eventually like to work in a museum or gallery.

Harrison's works are for sale. More information is given at the gallery.

If you wish to talk to the artist or to inquire more about the work, there is a closing reception from 6 to 8 p.m. on Friday in the gallery.

Grief, anger magnified in Tasmania

Associated Press

HOBART, Australia — Tiny flames flickered at the base of a simple wooden crucifix on Wednesday, one candle for each of the 35 people methodically slain by an enraged gunman as they visited a popular tourist site.

Hundreds of mourners prayed at Hobart's St. David's Anglican Cathedral for the victims, ages 3 to 72. And as residents of Tasmania grieve for the dead, their anger only grows toward the murder suspect.

Martin Bryant, 28, was badly burned in a house fire he set just before police arrested him. Now, under heavy police guard, he is being treated for burns in the same hospital that is caring for survivors of Australia's worst massacre in modern times.

Hospital officials say people have called to complain that Bryant should not receive any medical treatment. In an act of protest, 20 nurses at the Royal Hobart Hospital called in sick Wednesday, hospital chief executive Lindsay Pyne said.

Doctors said Bryant, who was charged with murder at a bedside hearing, might require plastic surgery and could remain hospitalized for another week.

Wednesday's tearful state service started with a minute's silence observed throughout Australia, which includes the island of Tasmania 300 miles south-east of Melbourne.

At 10:30 a.m., streetcars stopped running, financial exchanges suspended trading, and schools interrupted classes.

Inside the Anglican cathedral where the service was nationally broadcast live on television, 800 friends, relatives and neighbors of the victims sat with the nation's leaders. Some wept openly.

"The suddenness of the assault, the scope of the massacre, the senselessness of the carnage, have left us in deep shock and even anger," Tasmania's Anglican bishop Phillip Newell said.

Before the service, Prime Minister John Howard, who has promised to tighten gun controls, visited the death scene, 30 miles south of Hobart.

"This is an event that has shaken the core of this country in a way that no individual crime has done in my lifetime," Howard said.

Bryant is accused of shooting sight-

Senators debate renewal of school tax

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Senate Republicans held the key Wednesday night to breaking the stalemate over renewal of the 35-mill school property tax and combining it with property tax relief.

The Senate GOP caucus studied five plans in a long caucus meeting Wednesday afternoon, and its leaders were deciding whether to debate one of those plans.

The plan most Republican senators supported in a show of hands was offered by Sens. Pat Ranson, R-Wichita, and Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence. But the only one Speaker Tim Shallenburger said the House would consider was brought to the caucus by Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson.

The Ranson-Praeger plan called for renewing the school mill levy at 35 mills for 1996-97, while reducing it two mills a year for each of the succeeding years — to 33 mills in 1997-98 and to 31 mills in 1998-99.

It also would add $19 to the per-pupil base state aid to local school districts, now at $3,626, as well as renew all districts' local option budgets for 1996-97 with votes of district constituents.

The Kerr proposal would provide much more property-tax relief by exempting the first $30,000 of assessed valuation on homes and 5 percent of the valuation on commercial property in the first year. The $30,000 exemption would continue in the second year, while the business property exemption would rise to 10 percent in the second year.

The Ranson-Praeger plan would provide $23 in property tax reduction on a $100,000 home in each year there was a two-mill reduction in the school levy. Kerr's plan would provide $120 million in tax relief on a $100,000 home in the first year.

House GOP leaders ridiculed the amount of property tax relief in the Ranson-Praeger plan.

Kerr's plan also would add $15 to the per-pupil base and use a revenue accelerator to pay for it all.

It is the accelerator that Gov. Bill Graves so strongly opposes that most Republicans believe he would veto a bill with it in it.

The accelerator involves moving the date for making second-half property taxes back from June 20 to May 1 in 1997. That generates a one-time $226-million windfall for the state general fund by collecting the second-half taxes in fiscal year 1998. Without ad-

Guerrillas claim Clinton unfair

Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Hezbollah guerrillas accused President Clinton Wednesday of trying to absolve Israel of guilt for the artillery barrage that killed 91 refugees at a U.N. base in southern Lebanon.

Clinton has endorsed Israel's contention that guerrillas provoked the April 18 barrage in the village of Qana by firing a salvo of Katyusha rockets at northern Israel from the vicinity of the base.

The attack on the base was the deadliest in the 16-day air, sea and artillery offensive that Israel launched April 11 in an attempt to stop Hezbollah's Shiite Muslim guerrillas from firing rockets into northern Israel.

The attack stopped Saturday under a cease-fire brokered by the U.S. secretary of state.

At least 162 people were confirmed killed and 339 wounded in the fighting, the worst flare-up in 14 years on the last active Arab-Israeli war front. Qana's victims accounted for most of the deaths.

They were buried in a mass grave at Qana on Tuesday by a sea of mourners shouting "Death to Israel" and "Death to America."

"Clinton's justification of the Qana massacre, which was committed by the Israeli enemy with U.S. weapons and green light, is designed to absolve Israel of guilt by blaming it on the victim," Hezbollah's statement said.

The Iranian-backed Hezbollah leads a guerrilla war to dislodge Israeli occupation troops from a border enclave Israel has occupied in southern Lebanon since 1985.

The enclave has a predominately Shiite Muslim population of 200,000.

Hezbollah's criticism of Clinton coincided with U.S. condemnation of Iran, the group's arms supplier and cash backer, as the premier sponsor of international terrorism.

A State Department report released Tuesday charged that Iran is deeply involved in the planning and execution of terrorist acts. Tehran has repeatedly denied the American charges.

A Lebanese group of lawmakers, legal experts and human rights activists trying to win the release of some 200 Lebanese prisoners held by Israel and its militia ally in southern Lebanon said that Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel should be tried as a war criminal.

In a move marking the Islamic feast of Eid al-Adha, the Israeli-allied South Lebanon Army militia released nine prisoners today from a detention camp inside the Israeli-held zone, the militia command said in a statement.

The eight Lebanese — seven men and a woman — and a Palestinian man were freed from Khiam prison where some 200 Lebanese are held on suspicion of carrying out anti-Israel guerrilla attacks.

The nine had been held for terms ranging from three to seven years.

McVeigh's lawyers question death penalty's legitimacy

Associated Press

DENVER — Defense lawyers in the Oklahoma City bombing case argued Wednesday that the federal death penalty is unconstitutional because it is more likely to be meted out if murder victims are old, young or sick.

"It makes no sense because no person was more vulnerable than others," said Richard Burr, a lawyer for Timothy McVeigh. McVeigh and Terry Nichols could get the death penalty if convicted of murder in the 1995 bombing that killed 168 people.

Burr asked U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch to throw out the 1994 Federal Death Penalty Act because it makes it easier for prosecutors to seek the death penalty if the victims are old, young, infirm or otherwise vulnerable.

But Special U.S. Attorney Sean Connolly argued that the jury should be allowed to consider the health and age of the victim as an aggravating factor. "I don't need to remind you there were 19 babies and children in that building who could not be more vulnerable," Connolly said.

Under the law, the government has to prove at least one aggravating factor existed when the crime was committed to get the death penalty.

"If the death penalty is not appropriate to this case, it's hard to imagine a case where it would be," Connolly said.

Matsch, who moved the case to Denver in February after ruling the defendants couldn't receive a fair trial in Oklahoma, didn't immediately rule.

Defense attorneys also said the federal law fails to meet criteria approved by the U.S. Supreme Court for a death penalty statute and does not establish an adequate procedure for courts to review death sentences.

Java will also offer more coupons for food and drinks in the future, Dean said.

"We feel it's important to try to provide the students and the Manhattan community with an enjoyable atmosphere and to service them with the best possible baked goods and coffees that we can offer," Dean said.

Dean said he hopes to provide a more relaxed environment as well as new coffees and beverages for Java customers.

International, said the decision to name Pitts president was made last year.

She said this is his second year of a three-year term. He was first known as president-elect, is now president and next year will be immediate past president.

There are some qualifications an individual must have in order to obtain the position of president of the association.

"I had to have served in a regional leadership position and a national leadership position and served in the professional field of student unions and student activities administration," Pitts said.

Metz said there is a committee in the association that makes nominations for the position of president.

After nominations are made, those who were nominated and would like the position can apply.

Each of the applicants is then interviewed by a committee made up of people all over the United States, and a decision is made.

Pitts said as president he will primarily preside over a nine-member executive committee concerning such issues as policy development and budget development.

He said he will also preside over an international conference in New Orleans next year as well as doing many other tasks.

The association was founded in 1914 and is one of the oldest intercollegiate educational organizations in the United States.

The main goal of the association is to help its membership of more than 1,000 institutions in eight different countries provide union and activities programs contributing to college students' development.

Recently, there have been many changes and accomplishments taking place at K-State's Union.

"The continual refinement for the upcoming enhancement project, moving toward making the K-State Union financially stable and continuing to provide quality services and programs for our students, faculty and staff, are the best accomplishments," Pitts said.

Pitts recently experienced a minor stroke, but he said he is under doctors' care and on medication, and his health is improving.

"Well, exactly how does he look at women?" Pinion asked. "Does he mean we don't just after men the same way men lust after women? We sure do, if they're lustable."

Dorothy Froom, having lunch with her husband, nodded toward her waitress' tight orange shorts and said, "I'd like to see a guy in those."

But Froom's lunch partner, Charles Combs, who works down the street and comes in three times a week, said he'd stop if men were hired.

"The girls know how to take your order just right, and they talk to you just right," he said. "No guy can be friendly to me and make me want to come back."

vancing the collection date, the taxes flow into the treasury in the following fiscal year.

An angry Graves went to Senate Republican caucus late Wednesday morning to tell GOP senators they had better have two-thirds votes in both houses to pass any of the "phony" tax relief plans such as the ones including the accelerator.

It takes a two-thirds vote to override a gubernatorial veto.

"Yes, I am angry, and I don't get angry very often," Graves said, venting his frustration over the Legislature's inability in the wrap-up session to renew the 35-mill school property tax levy and go home.

"If two-thirds of you disagree with me, you can do this (tax cut) deal and go home," Graves said.

"In fact, why don't you go home and tell your folks that you're going to make them pay their property taxes earlier so you can give them 'property tax relief?' Tell your people there's no money two years out ... that it may be a black hole."

"You must fund public schools. The other things are optional."

Police said they captured Bryant when he fled the inn after his clothes caught on fire. The charred bodies of the hostages were found in the building's ashes.

At the prison complex, yellow-painted outlines of bodies cover the road and pathways where victims fell.

Plans are being made to demolish a cafe where 20 people were killed. Workers at the site want it pulled down as soon as Bryant's trial is over.

Even tiny children were not spared.

"In an afternoon, my whole life has been erased," said Walter Mikac of Hobart, whose wife Nanette and two daughters Alannah, 6, and Madeline,

Police suspect local man in additional rape case

Portia Sisco
staff writer

More charges were brought against Carl A. Mitchell, Manhattan resident, at his arraignment on Wednesday.

Mitchell, 29, was arrested Tuesday evening in connection with a rape that occurred early Tuesday morning.

He was already a suspect in a Manhattan-area rape that occurred on April 21.

"We knew we had him as a suspect on both of them," RCPD Captain Steve French said.

Mitchell was arrested in Topeka after Riley County Police Department received a tip from Wamego police.

"We were working on a warrant on the earlier case when the report came in of the yesterday case, and we put them together," Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said.

Mitchell was charged with aggravated assault, aggravated sodomy, aggravated robbery, aggravated sexual battery and criminal threats.

"As a testimony has deduced in court yesterday, he has no connections to Riley County, he has a serious criminal background, and he's been charged with serious crimes. There's a strong urge to run," Kennedy said.

Mitchell's bond was set at $250,000.

"One of the charges reflects a threat to one of the victims. There's also the safety of the community to be considered," Kennedy said.

If convicted, Mitchell could face a heavy jail sentence.

"It is possible if each offense were served consecutive to another, which is unlikely, it could be 51 years. It is also possible he could get more, but it's not likely," Kennedy said.

Mitchell is not a suspect in any other sexual assault cases at this time.

"Only time will tell," Kennedy said.

Student remains in hospital; friends, family ask for prayer

John Berggren
staff writer

At 1:47 a.m. last Friday, Alex Dill, a junior in horticulture, was struck while walking home. One week later, Dill is still listed in critical condition at St. Francis Regional Medical Center in Wichita.

While crossing east to west at the intersection of Laramie and 17th streets, he was hit by a vehicle heading south on 17th Street, which did not stop at the scene.

J. Jose Lopez turned himself in an hour later to the Riley County Police Department and was arrested for DUI, leaving the scene of an injury accident and aggravated battery. Lopez was later released on a $5,000 bond.

Dill's mother, Sandy, said there has been slight improvement.

"He's holding his own," Sandy Dill said. "He's fluttered his eyes a few times and will hold your hand and release it on command. He's still in a coma and has some inflammation in his kidneys, which is normal for someone who has been through what he has been."

"We're still praying for him, and we ask that everyone else pray for him also."

Many of Dill's friends at K-State visited him at the hospital.

Former roommate John Osborn, junior in business administration pre-professional, was one of the friends who visited.

"All I've heard are positive things," Osborn said. "He's moving around more in his bed and is opening his eyes. He's still in very critical condition, and they will keep him sedated for at least two to three weeks. The doctors are a lot more hopeful with all of his improvements."

Osborn said doctors allowed all of his friends to visit him in his room.

"They're letting us see him, and he has monitors hooked up to his brain," Osborn said. "When people are in his

Officials visit sorority, dispel closing rumors

J. Scot Bucholz
staff writer

Rumors of financial woes and imminent closing are put to rest as Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority welcomed officers from their national office.

"They did have two national officers visit," Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs, said.

The national officers discussed financial and membership concerns, but more so the visit was to focus on what direction to take the chapter, Robel said.

"I don't think they are closing the chapter," she said.

Robel said the Tri-Sigmas were provided with options on how to be a successful chapter.

Cathy Albright, Tri-Sigma area director in Oklahoma City, said she was not one of the members from the national office to visit but said they are not closing the chapter down.

"That is a rumor," she said.

"I would hope to dispel any rumors."

Albright did acknowledge the visit by Tri-Sigma national office, saying that their meeting was about rush plans and rush efforts for the fall.

"It is not uncommon for officers from national offices of any sorority or fraternity to come in as consultants to help out a chapter," she said.

"But we're not closing down," Albright said.

Albright said the visit was just providing assistance for the K-State chapter of Tri-Sigma with fall's formal rush plans.

Robel said it is not unusual on any campus for one or two houses to struggle with numbers.

"This is not reflective of anything different here at K-State," she said.

Numbers for sorority rush have remained stable during the last few years, Robel said.

"We (the greek community) would regret that if (if Tri-Sigma would close) would happen, yet we would continue on," she said.

A spokeswoman for the Delta Phi chapter of Tri-Sigma here at K-State said they will comment at a later date.

The Tri-Sigmas came to K-State in 1981 and are the second-newest member of K-State's sororities.

"We do want to stay on K-State's campus," Albright said.

Newspaper to remain unchanged

Portia Sisco
staff writer

For 75 years, the Mentor has been a weekly newspaper for Manhattan High School.

Principal Sylvester Benson considered changing that tradition.

"Mr. Benson told me six weeks ago the Mentor might become a bi-weekly newspaper," Penny Wika, Mentor adviser at MHS, said.

Benson cited budgetary and accuracy-related concerns as his reason for the change, Wika said.

"I presented information to him that showed the Mentor staff was self-supporting with its advertising revenues," Wika said.

Benson sent the staff a memorandum explaining his thought that several of the articles in the paper had been poorly researched. The staff requested a list of these articles, but Benson didn't comply, Wika said.

"I have not heard any criticism of any story we had until he said he was considering changing to a biweekly," Wika said.

Barricaded street to reopen today

Carl Cornelison
city/government editor

The barricades on Laramie Street between 14th and 16th streets will be removed this morning.

The barricades were put up April 15 so city officials could collect data on how closing the street would affect traffic and parking in the surrounding area.

Jerry Petty, director of community development for Manhattan, said the data has been collected but will take about two weeks for analyzing.

He said he has received the most complaints about the temporary barricade from Aggieville business owners.

"We had a lot of contact from businesses in the Aggieville area, but the general public, no," Petty said.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said she was glad to see the barricades coming down.

She said she received about 500 surveys from Aggieville customers concerning the barricade, and most were negative comments.

Manhattan Christian College wanted the study to be conducted to determine the feasibility of permanently closing Laramie Street between 14th and 16th streets.

The college wants to enclose the campus and construct a courtyard and garden area between the buildings.

ECONOMIC GROWTH EXPLODES; SOME FEAR HIGHER INTEREST RATES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy is surging back to life, gratifying the White House but jolting Wall Street. Powered by a heavy spending for business computers and consumer goods, growth accelerated to 2.8 percent in the first three months of the year in spite of blizzards, government shutdowns and a major auto strike.

President Clinton, hoping for a strong economy in an election year, was pleased, but financial markets tumbled, fearing the stronger-than-expected growth will force the Federal Reserve to start raising interest rates.

"This has been a good day for our country," Clinton said before meeting with a bipartisan group of senators on the budget. "We found the American economy is continuing to grow steadily and without inflation and better than had been expected."

Private analysts agreed that the surprisingly strong 2.8 percent increase in the gross domestic product — the nation's total output of goods and services — depicted a sizable rebound from a barely discernible 0.5 percent GDP gain in the fourth quarter of 1995.

But investors fretted that the economy is growing too rapidly for the sixth year of an economic expansion and this will force the Federal Reserve to cool things off with higher interest rates.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which was down nearly 100 points at one stage Thursday, closed off 76.95 at 5,498.27.

"The market is clearly worried that the Fed will have to slam on the brakes," said David Wyss, chief financial economist at DRI-McGraw Hill Inc.

BILL TO TIGHTEN U.S. BORDER

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nearly unanimous Senate passed an immigration bill Thursday that would tighten border controls and make it tougher for illegal aliens to get U.S. jobs. It would also curtail legal immigrants' access to social services.

The 97-3 vote sends a message "that America will no longer stand by passively — we will take control of our borders," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, the presumptive GOP presidential nominee.

President Clinton said he was "pleased that the Senate has endorsed our strategy with legislation that answers my administration's call for tougher penalties for alien smugglers, criminal aliens and manufacturers and sellers of fraudulent documents."

"I urge the Congress to quickly finalize and send me this key legislation," Clinton said in a statement.

The measure would nearly double the border patrol guards to about 10,000, authorize pilot projects that would let employers easily verify whether a worker is eligible for a job in the United States and increase penalties for document fraud and alien smuggling.

MAN INDICTED IN BANK SCAM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joseph Waldholtz, estranged husband of Rep. Enid Waldholtz, was charged with bank fraud Thursday in what prosecutors called a check-kiting scheme involving almost $3 million in worthless checks.

The 27-count indictment accused Waldholtz, former campaign manager for his wife, of writing numerous worthless checks in early 1995 to make it appear there were substantial deposits into two checking accounts belonging to the couple.

The accounts actually were in the red, and Waldholtz ended up spending $209,000 the couple did not have.

Rep. Waldholtz, R-Utah, is not accused of participating in the scheme alleged in the indictment.

But U.S. Attorney Eric Holder's office said in a statement that the indictment is part of a broader investigation related to the couple's finances. "The investigation of matters not contained in today's indictment is continuing," the statement said.

Rep. Waldholtz said her husband had criminally victimized a long line of people who trusted him, and she called the indictment the first step toward justice.

Rep. Waldholtz, announced she will not seek a second term.

MAN CHARGED WITH SLAYINGS

CHICAGO (AP) — A man was charged with killing 12 women on the city's South Side — many of them drug addicts and prostitutes — and stashing his latest victim in his bedroom closet until his mother could help him dispose of the body.

Gregory Clepper, a 28-year-old crack addict, signed confessions to the killings, State's Attorney Jack O'Malley said Thursday.

In a string of slayings that began in 1991, Clepper strangled or beat prostitutes when they objected to his refusal to pay them and left the bodies in alleys or garbage bins, police said.

Police said they tracked Clepper down after he boasted to an acquaintance of killing 30-year-old Patricia Scott. She was found raped and strangled in a trash bin at a high school on April 24.

Clepper allegedly killed Scott a day earlier at the home he shared with his mother, Gladys Clepper, and stashed the body in his closet. Gladys Clepper and a friend of Clepper's, Eric Henderson, helped him carry the body to a car, police said.

Clepper was jailed without bail on 12 counts of murder and three counts of aggravated sexual assault. O'Malley said he hasn't decided whether to seek the death penalty.

Gladys Clepper, 46, was charged with concealing a homicide. Henderson, 30, was charged with two counts of the same offense; police said he also watched Clepper kill an earlier victim and helped dispose of her body.

DINOSAURS LEAPT FROM SHELLS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dinosaurs, history's terrible lizards, might have tenderly guarded their unhatched eggs, but a study contends the newborns leaped from their shells fully ready to scamper into a dangerous world.

"They had the ability to hit the ground running," said Nicholas R. Geist, a researcher at Oregon State University. "They were highly mobile. They were able to run and protect themselves."

Geist and Terry D. Jones, also of Oregon State, came to this conclusion by comparing the density of pelvic bones in fossilized dinosaur embryos with the bones of birds and crocodiles.

The very size difference between hatchlings and their parents suggests that the newborns could not have lived alone in that dino-eat-dino world millions of years ago, Jack Horner, a Montana State University paleontologist, said.

City, county discuss annexation

Chris Oakley

staff writer

City and county commissioners met Thursday to discuss ways to ease the annexation process for Riley County citizens.

Commissioners were concerned with how to provide services such as waste treatment and water services before the land is annexed and becomes part of the city.

"I think what we ought to think about as elected officials is quit our turf battles and make plans for Manhattan to grow. We have to think together and make plans for the future. Otherwise, we are going to be fighting over zoning and planning," county commissioner chairman Russ Frey said.

"I think the hard and fast rule of going from rural to annexation is too much of a shock."

City commissioner Steve Hall said he wasn't aware of any problems between the city and county concerning land.

"I think long-range planning is fine," he said. "I guess I just missed the turf fighting."

City commissioner Bruce Snead said the city might need to look into the rates it charges those who live outside city limits for services. Water costs twice as much per month for non-Manhattan residents, and sanitary sewer costs are 150 percent more.

Snead said a transition in the fee process would ease the entire annexation process.

Tuttle Creek Mobile Home Park outside Manhattan wanted to connect to the city's wastewater treatment facilities, County Commissioner Jim Williams said.

He said a solution would be a compromise to allow city water and waste treatment and possibly street improvements to be offered before annexation would occur.

"This is the third area we've run into. We need an agreement where we could phase these in. The bottom line is you are going to gain in the long run with increased taxes," Williams said.

"To go directly from point A to Z and annexation is not agreeable to some people," he said.

County Commissioner Karen McCullough said she felt allowing services for nonresidents would ease the transition if the city ever wanted to annex more land.

"I feel allowing them to have city services at a reasonable rate of return for the city would ease the transition," she said.

City commissioner Edith Stunkel said she felt the city and county planning board should work together to help with any solutions.

"I think it's important they get together and throw their ideas in the hopper," she said.

Three ways to beat the high cost of college.

1. The Montgomery GI Bill
2. Student loan repayment
3. Part-time income

The Army Reserve Alternate Training Program is a smart way to pay for college.

First, if you qualify, the Montgomery GI Bill can provide you with up to $7,124 for current college expenses or approved vo/tech training.

Second, if you have—or obtain—a qualified student loan not in default, you may get it paid off at the rate of 15% per year or $500, whichever is greater, up to a maximum of $10,000. Selected military skills can double that maximum.

Third, you can earn part-time money in college, and here's how it works: One summer you take Basic Training, and the next summer you receive skill training at an Army school. You'll earn over $1,500 for Basic and even more for skill training. Then you'll attend monthly meetings at an Army Reserve unit near your college, usually one weekend a month plus two weeks a year. You'll be paid over $107 a weekend to start. It's worth thinking about. Give us a call:

What to do on Dead Day

Slackers, bookworms alike need something to do when there's no class

As dead day approaches next Friday, students might ponder what to do on the first day before finals. There are several things to do. You can travel down two paths on that day — the responsible path or the not-so-responsible path.

For those of you too gripped in exam anxiety to bear wasting a day playing, here is a list of some serious things to do on dead day.

Step 1. Your class-conditioned body won't let you sleep past your 9:30 a.m. class. Wake up at 8 a.m. for no good reason at all. Fume for 20 minutes, toss and turn, and then get up.

Step 2. Eat a bowl of Cheerios (lots of sugar) and watch the "Today Show."

Step 3. Crack open the book for your first final on Monday. Get a head start.

Step 4. Call some of your classmates to inquire about when they are going to study. You get two answering machines, and you woke one of them up cursing at you for waking them up so early in the day.

Step 5. Quit studying, hop in the car and scour liquor stores, shoe stores and grocery stores for boxes. Haul them home and start filling them. (Note: don't shower first. You'll just get dirty again.)

Step 6. Realize you have way too much junk to move home. Start pitching stuff or ask your neighbors if they want it.

Step 7. Mother's Day is the Sunday before finals. Get a card before all that's left are the cheesy, flowery poem "You're the greatest Mom in the world" cards.

Step 8. Get your car prepared for the move home. Check the oil and fluid levels, clean the candy bar wrappers, Burger King cups and contraceptives out of the back seat.

Step 9. Go to the post office and fill out a change of address form.

Step 10. Fill out one for your roommate, too, but send his or her mail to the White House instead.

Step 11. If you live in an apartment and are leaving for the summer, make arrangements to shut off your electricity, cable television and phone.

Step 12. If you are graduating, start cleaning the house in anticipation of relatives now. Clean the mold out of that refrigerator you've been ignoring since last summer. Vacuum the carpet. And guys, don't forget the bathroom.

Step 13. Also for those graduating, take advantage of sales and graduation money to stock up on stickers, T-shirts, etc. with the words "K-State alumni" on them.

Step 14. Make up a study schedule so you can be sure to devote enough time to each final.

Step 15. Sell your books back early in an attempt to get a good price for them.

Step 16. Go down to Aggieville and get some fast food, because time wasted is time better spent studying.

Step 17. Return home to retrieve some notes you forgot and set the VCR to tape "The X-Files." Walk in on roommate and significant other "occupied."

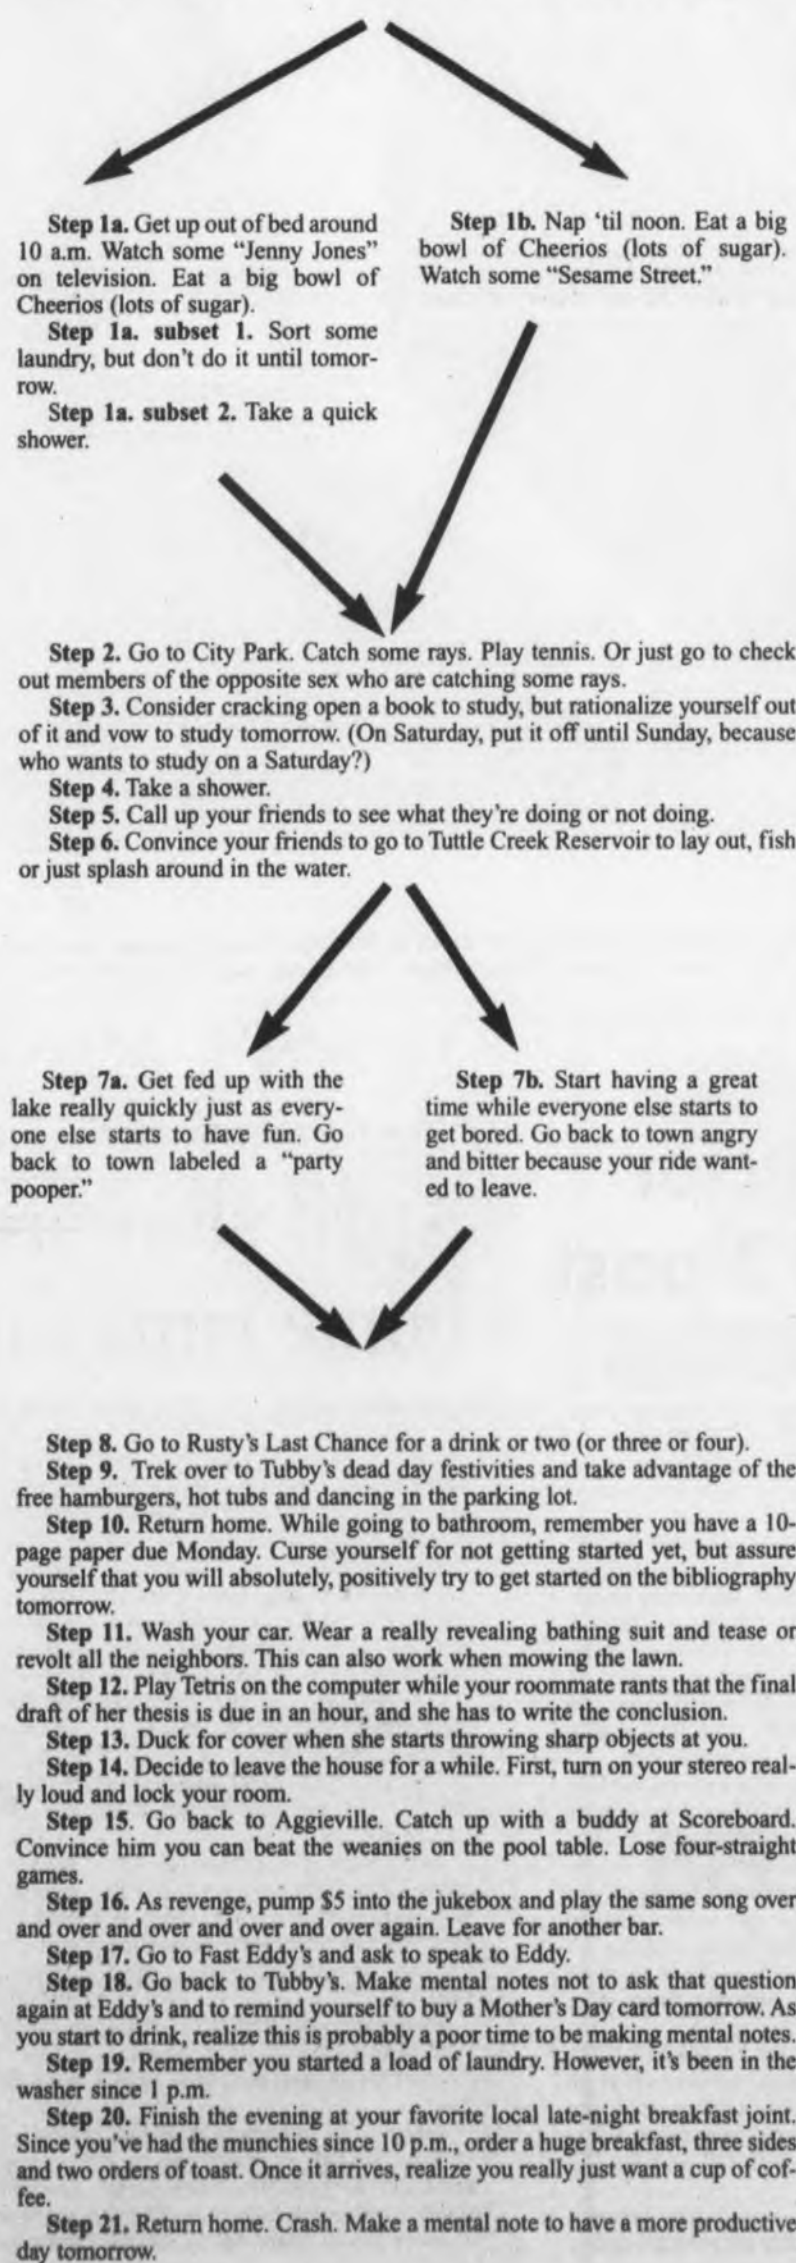

Step 18. Go back and double check your study schedule and your finals' times to make sure you're on the right track.

Step 19. Friends twist your arm to take a break and go out for a drink. Take them up on it literally. After your first drink, head home to get back the books.

Step 20. Go to Village Inn to study around 1:30 a.m., forgetting about the bar rush that will soon happen. Leave in disgust.

Step 21. Go to bed around 4 a.m. gloating to drunk roommate about your productive day. Tell your roommate to make a mental note not to forget Mother's Day.

Now the not-so-responsible path can be more relaxing and calming than the responsible path, but not always productive. (Notice that there is already a fork in the road. Oh, which way to go?)

THE CASUAL CRITICS

by Page Getz and Nolan Schramm

"Flirting with Disaster"

Page:

The recipe for disaster?

Two Eastern yuppies, an entomologist couple with postpartum anxiety, a desperate psychologist in the middle of a divorce, a gay couple, one with a wandering, bisexual eye, the other an officer with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, and a couple of '60s rejects with a surplus of LSD and a teenage son with a vengeance.

The beginning of the movie flirted with box-office disaster, but somehow it did rise above the ashes of unused ticket stubs to slightly amusing and then genuinely entertaining.

The film's mistake was that it had this 20-something, "Reality Bites"-sequel feel to it, but the resurrecting force in it is Mary Tyler Moore, Alan Alda, Lily Tomlin and George Segal's characters, whose neurotic dispositions carry the film.

Moore and Segal play the Coplins, the adopted parents who are yuppie-type Jewish New Yorkers who are sophisticatedly melodramatic and chaotic.

In contrast, Tomlin and Alda play the Schlichtings, the acid-dosing flakes with a maladjusted, (understatement) wanna-be beatnik adolescent chef whose dinner menu includes what you might call psychedelic quail.

The characters are hysterically self-conscious, with a Woody Allen meets Roseanne-ish analytical and bizarre in a sort of Charlie Brown kind of way.

The disappointment of the flick is the typical two women fighting for the same dense and unattractive male who cannot commit or decide between the annoying ditz with the perfect body and, of course, his wife, who is supposed to be the maternal, unappealing one and is apparently fat (although the special effects must not have been so effective, because she couldn't have been more than 120 pounds).

Predictably, you're watching two women chasing a man not worth chasing, even superficially speaking.

It is an annoyingly common coincidence that in so many of these love stories, the leading man is a dog who we are supposed to be convinced is irresistible.

Despite its shortcomings, the charm of "Flirting with Disaster" resembles the high-strung air of the old "Three's Company" sitcom with a '90s twist and '60s backwash.

Nolan:

Flirting with Disaster is a raucous, modern comedy focusing on the life of one dissatisfied generation-Xer.

Mel Coplin (Ben Stiller) has a promising future — a beautiful wife who is obsessed with her body weight after giving birth, and a cute widdle baby boy.

The only thing he's missing is a history. Mel was adopted, and if his adopted parents are any clue, it's no wonder he's searching.

As a scientist, his analytical mind is coupled with idiosyncrasies including (but not limited to) insecurity, passive aggression — and he's in a rut when it comes to fellatio.

This makes him an interesting case study for the counselor-in-training, Tina (Tea Leoni) who is currently working on her doctoral dissertation.

But his wife (Patricia Arquette) is dragged along for the ride.

A wacky, cross-country ride eventually lands the trio in New Mexico, at the doorstep of his biological parents, played by Alan Alda and Lily Tomlin.

Cinematography is splendidly hovering over the scenes, placing the action in proper demeanor in Tarantino-esque fashion.

The movie plays on stereotypes. Mel's adoptive parents are the arguing Jewish parents. Everyone is convinced he is nothing like them, but as the plot progresses, we see he is more like them than his biological parents, which brings us to stereotype number two.

Lily Tomlin plays an excellent mother, with Alan Alda as his father, a former Hell's Angel who now makes his living in New Mexico.

Along the way, we meet two ATF agents. Wow. Talk about stereotypical!

The climax wraps up a lot of loose ends that were floating around the picture.

Delightful twists and turns make this an enjoyable show. Don't let it fool you into simplicity. Things are not as they seem.

With a soundtrack featuring Urge Overkill, Squirrel Nut Zippers — and a couple of clips from the 'Dead — you'll get it.

Team to compete in Invitational

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

K-State's track teams return to action this weekend when they are host to the three-day Wildcat Invitational.

The meet will feature K-State athletes along with athletes who will be competing without an affiliation.

Field events start at 2 p.m. Friday, and track events follow at 4 p.m. Saturday's competition starts with the field events at 12:30 p.m. and continues with the track events at 1:45 p.m. The men's pentathlon will start at 11 a.m. Sunday, with a women's 30-minute pentathlon to follow at 2 p.m.

The meet will be at the R.V. Christian Track south of Bramlage Coliseum.

The meet will be the first action for the Wildcats since last weekend's Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa. Several K-Staters placed in the two-day meet, which featured cool temperatures throughout, such as an 18-degree windchill Friday morning.

Leading the way was Paul Birnbaum, who placed third in the men's 10,000-meter invitational run with a time of 30:17.30. Other notable K-State performances included Marshall Grayson, seventh in men's university and college long jump (23'11.00"); Itai Margalit, eighth in men's special high jump (6'11.00"); and Scott Galas, seventh in men's university and college men's 800-meter run (1:50.56).

K-State returns to dual competition next week when it travels to Lincoln to take on Nebraska in a dual meet. The May 9 event begins with field events at 11 a.m. and track events at 3 p.m.

Strong schedule helped Cats

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team will be making its first-ever appearance in the NCAA Tournament today in Lawrence.

K-State finished the regular season with a 10-7 mark in duals action this season. The Cats' losses have come against teams that have been ranked in the top 50 in the ITA rankings.

"I've always been an advocate of playing a strong schedule throughout the year," Coach Steve Bietau said.

This season the Cats also received their highest ranking in school history with a No. 47 national team ranking.

The team also has two players in the ITA rankings. Senior Karina Kuregian and sophomore Yana Dordnova finished the season ranked in the ITA singles rankings.

K-State will be playing in the Central Regional tournament, which will be at the University of Kansas. The Cats will enter the contest seeded fourth in the regional, which contains eight teams.

K-State's first opponent will be Utah. This will not be the first meeting for the two schools. Both met in an earlier dual in Manhattan. The Cats earned the victory in that contest, taking the dual 6-1.

"They have a very good team," Bietau said. "In our first match with them, we played awfully well. It was probably a little tougher than the score looked like."

If K-State does get by Utah, it will face the winner of the Kansas vs. Boise State dual on Saturday. The Jayhawks enter the tournament with the No. 1 seed in the Central Regional.

The champion in each region will advance to the finals in Tallahassee, Fla., on the campus of Florida State University.

Making it to the NCAA Tournament was a big step for the team this year.

"This was probably our biggest goal at the start of the season," Bietau said. "We're very excited and very proud to be selected."

Players shared the same sentiments as Bietau.

"Oh yes, I'm very excited about this," Kuregian said. "This was really my main goal for the season. I really wanted the team to make it this far."

Turning two

Kendall Kaufman, graduate student in mechanical engineering, prepares to throw to first after having tagged Eric Baker, sophomore in restaurant management, Thursday afternoon at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Baker's team, "Ep Head," beat Kaufman's team, "Genetically Inept," 17-8.

Statistics show Wildcats' troubles

■ In an up-and-down season, the Wildcats' downs have come at the oddest times

John Berggren
staff writer

Each time the K-State baseball team has faced last place Iowa State, the Wildcats have expected a win. Each time, the Cyclones have had something else in mind for the Cats.

In a four-game season series, K-State managed to take only one game from the league's worst squad.

What's wrong with the Cats? Fans have to look no further than the team statistics.

After Wednesday's games, the statistics show several glaring problems that might explain the Cats' woes.

The Cats have 103 errors on the season and have played only three games without committing an error.

Shortstop Heath Schesser owns the dubious record of committing the team's highest amount of errors with 25. Third baseman Todd Fereday and second baseman Scott Poepard follow closely behind with 20 and 16, respectively.

Another glaring statistic is the poor performance of the Cats' pitching. The team ERA is hovering at 5.32 with the best ERA credited to closer David Johnson at 3.06. Johnson also leads the team in saves with five.

After Johnson, the next best ERAs go to starter Matt Koeman and relief pitcher Brian Thompson at 4.57 and 4.68, respectively.

Koeman leads the team in wins at 7-3. Thompson is second on the team in saves with four.

The one strength for the Cats has been at the plate. The team is hitting for a combined .304 batting average, and its on-base percentage is at .413.

Schesser leads the team with a .361 batting average followed by Fereday, Poepard and designated hitter/first baseman David Hendrix at .354, .332 and .324, respectively.

Hendrix, in the first game of the nightcap against Iowa State Wednesday, picked up his 200th hit. In the second game, he went five-for-five, surpassing Steve Anson on the all-time hit list. Anson, who played from 1973-76, was fourth on the all-time list at 202.

At Hendrix's clip, he could make a run at taking over the third spot on the all-time list, which is owned by Greg Korbe with 218, who played in the 1975-78 seasons.

► Big 12 CONFERENCE

OU's athletic director resigns for Big 12 post

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Oklahoma athletic director Donnie Duncan will resign to become associate commissioner of the Big 12 Conference, according to a published report.

The Daily Oklahoman reports in a copyright story that two highly placed Big 12 sources confirmed Duncan has been offered a three-year contract to serve as director of football operations for the new league.

"It's a done deal," a source told the Oklahoman.

"The timing for Donnie's departure from Oklahoma is all that needs to be worked out at this point."

Duncan was out of his office this morning.

The university called a news conference for 2:30 p.m. Thursday.

Duncan, who has been athletic director since 1986, played a key role in the formation of the new Big 12, which includes the Big 8 Conference schools along with Baylor, Texas, Texas A&M and Texas Tech.

He also was heavily involved in the selection of Steve Hatchell as commissioner of the league, which is officially scheduled to start July 1.

Hatchell, contacted at the league's temporary headquarters in Dallas, declined to confirm or deny Duncan's hiring.

But sources told the newspaper that Duncan has informed Oklahoma president David Boren of the job offer, and Boren has agreed to let Duncan out of the final years of the eight-year contract extension he signed last year.

One of the sources disputed speculation that Duncan, 56, would leave Oklahoma because it reportedly embarrassed Boren that football coach Howard Schnellenberger was forced to resign last December after just one season.

"Boren has a great deal of respect for Duncan and realizes what he has done for the university," the source said.

"The two men have a strong working relationship, and he (Boren) would have preferred that Duncan stayed on at OU."

Instead, the source said, the reason Duncan sought to break his contract was because, "Donnie has some medical concerns within his family, and this job will allow him to live closer to those family members and see them more often."

"And because of his football background, Donnie sees this new job as an exciting and excellent opportunity to put his extensive experience to use in a way that will benefit both OU and the Big 12."

His new job would pay between $80,000 and $90,000 per year, according to the newspaper.

April showers bring home runs for fans

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Three of baseball's biggest offensive days in this century all came in the last week as the sport's longest April ended with lots of long balls.

Of the 4,183 days since 1900 on which 12 or more games were played, April 24 (13.93 runs per game average), April 30 (13.92) and April 28 (13.58) all were in the top five, according to research by the Elias Sports Bureau.

The record of 14.07 was set on July 25, 1937; July 10, 1932, also had a 13.58 average.

There were 826 homers in 359 games in April for an average of 2.3, up 64 percent from the 1.4 average in 1992, the last year before expansion and 3.6 percent higher than April 1994.

Runs were up 28 percent from 1992, to an average of 10.58, which is 1.7 percent higher than two years ago.

Texas (26), Minnesota (24) and Montreal (21) all scored 20 runs in a game, the first time three teams did it in one month since June 1950.

Barry Bonds, Gary Sheffield and Brady Anderson hit 11 homers apiece in the month, matching the major-league record for April shared by Willie Stargell (1971), Mike Schmidt (1976) and Graig Nettles (1974).

Montreal became the first team to hit six grand slams in a month, topping the previous record set by Baltimore in September 1983 and matched by Seattle in August 1985.

At 3.98, the Chicago White Sox are the only AL team with an ERA under 4. Detroit's is a major-league high 7.31.

Meanwhile, fans are starting to come back.

The average attendance was up 7 percent in the first four weeks of the season, from 23,606 to 25,260 for the first 338 dates.

Following the strike, the average dropped 20 percent for the first month last year.

Television viewers also increased. ESPN's first 14 broadcasts averaged a 1.9 rating, up 27 percent from last year's 1.5, but down 14 percent from 1994's 2.2.

Despite efforts to cut game time, the average for a nine-inning game was 2 hours, 53 minutes, down just one minute from last year's average.

Former Roos' star assaults woman

Associated Press

DALLAS — Tony Dumas of the Dallas Mavericks allegedly punched his pregnant girlfriend in the torso last week, forcing her to leap from a car after it had slowed to a crawl on the highway.

"She was just trying to get away from him," detective William Everett said.

Dumas, a former Missouri-Kansas City basketball player, allegedly dragged her on her knees back into the car.

Georgia Foy, 25, later called police and sought medical attention for a black eye, cuts and scrapes. She is four months pregnant.

Police said an arrest warrant was expected to be issued this week.

Dumas faces a Class A misdemeanor assault charge. The charge carries a penalty of up to a year in jail and a $4,000 fine.

Earlier this year, Dumas was charged for filing a false police report.

In this latest incident, police say the 23-year-old guard was driving on Interstate 635 in north Dallas about 4 a.m. last Friday when he and Foy began arguing.

Dumas was accused of repeatedly hitting her in the face with the back of his hand and punching her.

Foy then dived from the car, hitting her head on the ground, police said.

Mavericks spokesman Kevin Sullivan said the team had no comment, and player personnel director Keith Grant is trying to find out precisely what happened.

Police records show Foy has filed no previous complaints against Dumas.

Dumas' lawyer, Danny Garner, said he had spoken briefly to his client.

"I hope we can get this thing resolved without any further legal action," he said.

On Jan. 14, Dumas was arrested and charged with falsely reporting to police that his car had been stolen.

Police said he filed the report as a cover for fleeing the scene of an accident earlier that night. The false report charge against him is pending.

COMMENTARY

Media influence image, capitalize on female insecurities

 staff writer

The ultimate "feminine": Raphael's Galatea vs. Calvin Klein's Kate Moss.

Both represent the peak of cover girl hierarchy in their day, and both exemplify the paradox that while women's voices have been given more space during the last four centuries, the amount of space they are allotted by patriarchy as a physical form is shrinking.

It's curious that when women were considered men's property, they were encouraged to be larger, but now that women are supposed to be independent, women are expected to wear only a thin layer of skin over their skeletons.

To be the size of Galatea, or to be attracted to someone that size, is an American taboo.

The offensive shower of images in the media has developed a social conditioning that, for women, means a good metabolism is worth more than a master's degree. It is an equally curious equation.

Two beings meet at Aggieville Pizza. Both being A and being B have three identical pieces of pizza. Being B is a reject of a societal norm for eating the pizza. Why? Obviously, being B is a woman, and it is OK for being A — an average male — to eat the same thing. Not to mention he could have eaten three times as much as being B, and it would have been unnoticed.

How is it that what a woman eats has become a political issue, and how is it that being controlled by such social standards can be considered freedom?

The evangelists of these prophetic expectations aim to convince us that nature is out to get us. The appetite, the primal instinct for survival, is just one of many of these enemies, and a woman's body is the record of her wins and losses. Stretch marks, cellulite and weight gain are all inevitable, but inaccurate, means of measuring a woman's self worth based on this system.

Don't we want to grow old gracefully? The only option is to grow old ungracefully and having contributed a sad fraction of our income to an industry that takes pride on capitalizing on insecurities.

The business of marketing synthetic self esteem and cosmetic conformity is manufacturing fantasies, packaging media articulated and coordinated ideals of perfection and convincing women that these are within reach for $29.99, plus shipping and handling.

According to the bombardment of images in ads in all mediums directed at the average woman, her routine should include tanning, tucking, sucking, dieting, waxing, powdering, polishing, perming, crimping, curling, conditioning, moisturizing, minimizing, maximizing, fasting, gelling, spraying, spritzing, styling...

Can't keep up? The bad news is you never will. You will never be feminine enough. There is no such thing as the eternal feminine finish line, no coming of age, no tenure or insurance policy to protect your status as feminine.

If you think you're free, ask yourself how many of the products and services on patriarchy's shopping list you pay homage to as investments in what is ultimately your own exploitation.

Definitions that determine how valuable we are as women are fleeting with every trend. The standards shift conveniently so before you're through one bottle of miracle this or that, you have to buy two others.

It is a brilliant marketing technique. We pay for our own oppression.

Paw to rock the Wareham tonight

Phil Kellum
staff reporter

Lawrence's Paw, signed to A&M Records, makes a jaunt from Lawrence to Manhattan tonight to play a show at the Wareham Opera House.

It will be rocking the Wareham in the company of Manhattan's own Truck Stop Love and Dorothy from Lawrence.

After releasing several 7-inch singles on its own, Paw was signed to national record label A&M Records in 1992 in the signing frenzy that resulted after the explosion of Nirvana's "Nevermind" album.

The band was even featured in Newsweek, along with Helmet and other bands, as one of the bands that could have been the "next Nirvana" before it was actually inked its deal with A&M.

Members released their debut album titled "Dragline" in 1993 to mixed reviews.

Paw then embarked on a tour that took it across the United States and to Europe, where it played with labelmates Monster Magnet. The band also played some shows in Australia.

Paw has had some lineup changes since its debut, having switched bass players three times since then. The main core of Mark Hennessy on vocals and brothers Grant and Peter Fitch on guitar and drums, respectively, has remained the same. The current bassist is Jason Magieorowski.

Paw released its sophomore follow-up to "Dragline" in summer 1995 titled "Death To Traitors."

Option Magazine called Paw "big, loud, strong and completely mediocre."

The band didn't waste time in using that in print ads for "Death To Traitors."

Manhattan's own Truck Stop Love fills out the middle spot of the bill. The last time it played the Wareham was last April for its compact disc release party.

It is featured on the new 105.9 KLZR compilation CD "Big Sandwich."

Zach Baze, junior in advertising, said he is looking forward to the show.

"Truck Stop Love always puts on a good show," he said.

Advance tickets are on sale only at On The Wild Side for $6. They will be $8 at the door.

Jeff Boren, sophomore undecided, said, "For six bucks bringing together

GLEE CLUB

Group to sing 'The Big 8 Medley' for last time

Abbi Hake
staff writer

After a week-long delay due to the Garth Brooks concert, the Glee Club will make its spring performance at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel.

Gerald Polich, conductor for the program, said the show was moved to a later date so Brooks' concert-goers could see the Glee Club perform.

Tyler Reynolds, president of the club and junior in finance, said Friday night's performance will be unique because it will be the last time the men's club will perform the "The Big 8 Medley," which is a compilation of every Big 8 school's fight songs.

Reynolds said he's excited about singing the medley because it's humorous and it includes actions.

During the Oklahoma State University fight song, the singers will lend their impression of a cowboy by pretending to ride horses.

Polich said this spring's performance will also be special because of the one piece that combines the Men's and Women's clubs for the "Coronation Anthem No. 4" by George Handel.

"We haven't put the two groups together for a couple of years," Polich said.

Jamie Bush, fourth-year member and senior in journalism, Spanish and public relations, said he's most excited about the Handel piece.

"It's a rare opportunity to sing with the women's glee," Bush said.

Both the men and women have planned somewhat of a variety show, including some secular and sacred music.

The women will perform some sacred Renaissance and a variety of 20th-century tunes. These include "Think of Me" from the "Phantom of the Opera."

Polich said this year's club is comprised of about 55 men and 65 women, most of whom are not music majors. Admission is $3.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Plagiarism subject of letter

 Chris Oakley
 staff writer

In a letter to the editor printed in today's Collegian, Yiping Qui accuses C.S. Chang of plagiarism.

Qui, assistant professor of textile science, said Chang plagiarized some material in Chang's letter to the editor, published in the Collegian April 19.

Chang is a research engineer at the U.S. Grain Marketing and Production Research Center and adjunct associate professor of biological and agricultural engineering at K-State.

In his letter Qui said Chang plagiarized Ji-charng Yang's letter published March 25 in USA Today.

Qui said he noticed the similarities when a friend pointed them out.

"A friend of mine read it and thought it sounded familiar," he said.

Qui said he has no problem with people expressing their opinions, but they should give other people credit if they take their work.

"As faculty members, we cannot do this, period. It damages the reputation of the University," he said.

In Yang's letter, he writes, "Taiwan and China are two different countries, separated by the Strait of Taiwan. Taiwan is a fully democratic country with per capita income of $11,000, while China is a totalitarian country with per capita income of only $2,200."

"Taiwan is an open, modern society, while China is a human-rights abuser."

"Taiwan is a peace-loving country, while China

Peterson to run for state office

 Sarah Lunday
 news editor

Former student body president Jeff Peterson plans to announce his candidacy for Kansas state representative of the 66th district Tuesday.

The 23-year-old K-State graduate student will be running against long-time officeholder Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan.

Peterson said his campaign offers an opportunity for change.

"I like to cut straight to the heart of the issues," Peterson said.

Some of Peterson's issues will include economic diversification, growth and development.

"I came to Manhattan like a lot of people, and you just kind of fall in love with Manhattan, K-State and the community. I've been here six years, and I've kind of fallen in love with the community," he said.

"We need to focus on positive changes, such as opportunities for people in Manhattan. Get the economy to grow so the tax rate doesn't go up," Peterson said.

World War II veterans congregate during 4th Armored Division reunion story by chris oakley • photos by shane keyser

A man with a microphone welcomed the bus load to a tour of Fort Riley.

"Looking at your faces, I'm suspect you're from the World War II genre," Norm Childs, convention visitor's guide in Junction City, said.

The comments from the back of the bus let Childs know what kind of mood they were in.

"Some of them World War I," someone said. "We've got some from the Civil War," laughed someone else.

Childs laughed and continued his introduction. "Let me express my appreciation for what you did," he said. "I was born in 1940 and appreciate everything you all went through for us."

Some of the men on the bus wore jackets that read "Patton's Best" and "From Beach to Bastogne," while others wore hats with "Name Enough" embroidered on them. However, each had one common bond. Each man was a member of the U.S. Fourth Armored Division of the Third Army during World War II, and each man had many stories to tell.

The Midwest organization of the Fourth Division has met twice a year since 1947. The national organization also has an annual reunion for the veterans to get together again, reminisce and tell stories.

The group met Friday and Saturday to tour Fort Riley and Eisenhower Museum in Abilene and to lay a wreath at Eisenhower's grave.

Members of the group traveled from Wisconsin, Missouri, Illinois, Nebraska and Iowa for the meeting.

The division was stationed at Fort Drum in Pine Camp, N.Y. Three members of the division received the Congressional Medal of Honor, and the division was the second World War II division to receive the Presidential Medal citation.

"We're like brothers," Ray Green, Fourth Division veteran, said. "The entire Fourth Division is like that. These men would die for their brothers — some did."

The Fourth Division landed at Omaha Beach in Normandy 16 days after the Allied Forces D-Day invasion. The division then fought its way throughout France and Germany and into Czechoslovakia.

The division also fought at Bastogne, better known as the Battle of the Bulge.

The men traveled in tanks for thousands of miles in painfully cold weather. Because of air raids, the men often had to use shell casings as toilets.

Commanded by Gen. George Patton, the division was nicknamed "Roosevelt's Butchers" by the German army.

Green said he saw Patton only a couple of times.

"We were on a rest period one day. It was pretty outside, and guys were sitting around shooting craps and

Amigos, Burger King offer tuition reimbursement for students

QUICKread

Some local restaurants offer student-employees tuition reimbursement through a unique work program.

Students earn pay, help with college tuition while working

 Lynn Wuger
 staff reporter

Two local fast-food restaurants offer tuition reimbursement programs for employees who attend K-State.

Tuition reimbursement is set up as a bonus plan for college students. Along with receiving hourly pay, students on the program receive a percentage of money at the end of each semester to cover tuition.

Amigos in the Manhattan Town Center offers a Student Tuition Employment Program, STEP, for its workers.

"Amigos has been offering the STEP program for almost five years now," said Renee Holscher, district manager of the southern region, which consists of seven stores within Kansas and Missouri.

"Once you start working for us, you are already working toward STEP money even if you are in still in high school."

With the STEP program, students are reimbursed 25 to 100 percent of their college tuition based on their length of employment.

"The program is based on the amount of months you have been working for Amigos," Holscher said. "After you reach the 30-month mark, you qualify for 100 percent reimbursement."

Mandy Springer, Amigos employee and freshman in kinesiology, is one of those students.

"I will have been working for Amigos for four years in November," Springer said.

"Since I have been there for so long, I get 100-percent reimbursement, which should be around $1,000. That's enough to cover my tuition."

The amount of reimbursement money is based on the University of Nebraska at Lincoln's in-state tuition, Holscher said.

"Since the owner of the stores is from Lincoln, and that is where most of our stores are located, the reimbursement money is based on Nebraska's tuition for consistency reasons," she said.

"Therefore, students on STEP are eligible to receive up to $1,018 per semester."

Employees on the STEP program must be able to work a minimum of 20 hours a week and also must meet other store requirements to receive the reimbursement money.

"When you are on STEP, you are only allowed to take two or three weekends off a semester and you have to be available to work all lunches during the week," Springer said.

"But, you are reimbursed per credit hour so you don't have to be enrolled in a minimum amount of classes."

Requirements vary from store to store, along with the amount of scholarships available, Holscher said.

"The program is set up for whoever is going to college, but stores generally have a limited amount of scholarships," she said.

"Managers distribute them according to the number of months the student has been employed, based on seniority."

Sarah Jones, one of two STEP employees at the Manhattan store, has been employed at Amigos for three years.

Jones, a shift supervisor and freshman in elementary education, said she plans to work there through next year.

"I have stayed around because I couldn't turn down the money," she said.

"I get paid over minimum wage, get a week paid vacation every year, the people I work with are great, and I

PARTY IMAGE MIGHT DETERMINE PRESIDENTIAL WINNER IN 1996

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Bob Dole deals with complaints from fellow Republicans that he is doing a poor job framing a campaign against President Clinton, he must consider a bigger immediate problem: the tattered image of his own party.

While the Republican Party's woes have been clearly detailed in public opinion research dating back to last year's budget fights, many top Dole and GOP strategists were stunned at the depth of the dissatisfaction discovered at more than a dozen recent focus groups commissioned by the Republican National Committee.

Anxious to help Dole — and congressional Republicans — develop an aggressive election-year agenda, the party research included sessions with an array of critical constituencies, from Ross Perot voters, Roman Catholics and suburban women to Democrats who said their support for Clinton was weak and Republicans who defected to support Clinton against George Bush four years ago.

The findings suggested that, despite his 20-point lead in national polls, there is considerable discomfort with Clinton among swing voters who question the Democratic incumbent's honesty, commitment to principle and leadership skills.

But the findings also detailed the toll last year's congressional debate took on the Republican Party's image, on issues from protecting Medicare and the environment, and the price Dole, the Senate majority leader, is paying for the GOP's poor standing.

PILL RESTORES MALE POTENCY

WASHINGTON (AP) — A pill that restores full function to impotent men is in the final phases of clinical testing and could be offered for sale in the United States late next year, a British scientist said.

The drug, called sildenafil, works by blocking the action of an enzyme in the penis that tends to aggravate impotence, said Dr. Ian Osterloh, a researcher with Pfizer Inc. in Britain.

"The pill is taken an hour or so before it is needed," Osterloh said. "It will do nothing, however, in the absence of sexual stimulation."

Reports on clinical studies of the drug will be given Monday at a meeting in Orlando, Fla., of the American Urological Association.

Osterloh said that in studies of hundreds of patients in Europe, the drug helped many men perform who had been impotent for years.

NATIONAL CRIME RATE DECLINES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Violent crime dropped 4 percent last year as overall serious offenses reported to police declined for the fourth straight year. But one expert said a slight increase in larceny fore-shadows a surge in youth crime.

Reporting Sunday on preliminary data for 1995, the FBI said the overall total for seven major crimes was down 2 percent from 1994. Overall reported crime was down in every region, led by a 4-percent decline in the Northeast.

Scholars, law enforcement officers and Democratic and Republican members of Congress hailed the data but unanimously warned that the large national trends mask an alarming rise in teenage violence.

In cities of more than 1 million residents, overall reported crime fell by 6 percent. Suburban counties and most mid-sized cities also reported declines, but rural counties showed a 3-percent increase.

Among violent crimes, murder dropped the most — 8 percent. Robbery was down 7 percent; rape was down 6 percent and aggravated assault 3 percent.

Total property crimes dropped 1 percent, with auto theft down by 6 percent and burglary 5 percent.

TALKS CONTINUE IN MIDEAST

TABA, Egypt (AP) — Peace talks between Israel and the Palestinians entered their final phase Sunday, with both sides set to face their toughest conflicts: the future of Jerusalem and Jewish settlement on the West Bank.

Those issues, which date back to the founding of the Jewish state, have been put off through five years of historic talks — talks that have so far produced two peace accords and a Nobel Peace Prize shared among PLO leader Yasser Arafat, Israeli prime minister Shimon Peres and his slain predecessor, Yitzhak Rabin.

This final phase of talks is expected to last at least three years.

Derby Days

photos by
SCOTT M. LADD

Katie Owens, freshman in secondary education and English, laughs as she and Susan Kelley, freshman in elementary education/special education, talk during a lull in the Derby Days competition.

Spectators cheer as Gamma Phi Beta team members pull the other team across the line during the Sigma Chi's Derby Days' tug-of-war competition. Delta Delta Delta won the competition.

Madcap competitions tug greeks into friendly war

Confusion reigned at Sigma Chi Derby Days at City Park Saturday.

Sorority members congregated at the park, some wearing tie die and beads, some wearing bandannas, some wearing army fatigues.

Bubbles floated around, and water guns were in use. The chants and cheers from each of the nine sororities made the day sound like a cheerleading camp as women rooted for friends in events like tug-of-war and relays.

The theme for the event was "Derby Dazed and Confused."

One of the more memorable chants came from the Delta Delta Deltas, who chanted about Tatonka.

Tatonka is a pinata the Tri-Delts traditionally use as their mascot.

"We take him where we go, and we chant about him," said Laura Markley, sophomore in marketing and Derby Days chairwoman for the Tri-Delts.

Other houses trying to steal Tatonka and burn him is also a tradition.

"Everybody tries to burn him, because they don't have a mascot," said Brooke Chilen, junior in advertising and member of Tri-Delt.

Chilen's words came true soon as sorority members marched around with a burning Tatonka.

"It's just a rivalry thing," said Kelly Delker, sophomore in international marketing and member of Alpha Delta Pi.

Even though competition was fierce, the main goal of the day was to have fun.

"It's a good time for all the houses to get together and interact," said Jennifer Kuntz, sophomore in pre-optometry and Derby Days chairwoman for Chi Omega. "We're hoping to have fun."

Then the events began, and one of the first events was the bat relay. For the bat relay, women ran down a corridor formed by cheering people to a bat, ran around the bat with their foreheads on the bat and ran back. It was the running back that was the trick. Some women were so dizzy they immediately fell down or ran the wrong direction into the crowd.

"You can't run straight, it seemed to take forever to get around the bat 10 times," said Jill Murphy, junior in pre-vet and member of Sigma Kappa.

Another event was the egg drop. For this event, Sigma Chi coaches laid down on the ground and held cups over their faces. Sorority members stood on step ladders, cracked open eggs and tried to drop them into the cups. Participants had a limited time to get as many eggs as they could into the cups.

Of course not all the eggs landed in the cups, a lot of them landed on the Sigma Chi coaches' faces.

After cleaning the egg off, Cory Mitchell, junior in architectural engineering and Sigma Chi coach for Pi Beta Phi, said "It's the most horrible experience I've ever gone through ever in my life."

Mitchell said he didn't know what the event was like before he participated, and he got duped into it.

At the end of the day, it was time for the mystery event, which was to see which sorority could fit the most women in a car.

Announcing the event was a challenge in itself. Brian Conley, sophomore in business and Derby Days chairman, said they didn't have a loud speaker, so he had to yell as loud as he could to announce things. By the end of the day, his voice was hoarse, and people had trouble hearing him.

As a result, he stood on top of the car and yelled at the crowd to shut up so he could announce the event.

The car was a beat-up maroon Brougham that was missing two hubcaps. As sorority members filled the car, it would sink so the entire car was touching the ground.

"I felt like a sardine," said Kate Sledgister, freshman undecided and member of Tri-Delt.

After the event, the crowd cleared off with only a few people remaining to hear the results. Trash covered the ground in front of the Sigma Chi house and at City Park.

Derby Days was done.

Studying tips for those preparing for finals

QUICKread

▶ As finals week approaches, students will begin to study this week. Students who live in residence halls, apartment complexes and greek houses need to have consideration for their fellow students and be quiet so others may concentrate.

In case you have forgotten, finals week is fast approaching. After all the work you have put into your classes this semester, next week is the make-or-break time.

Here are a few tips to facilitate better studying for yourself, your friends and roommates.

Respect everyone else who is trying to study for finals. Do not play music loudly in residence halls and apartment complexes. Make your own "quiet hours."

When you come home from a night out at the bars, do not be obnoxious. Those who are sleeping or studying will appreciate it. But, you should be studying, not living it up at the bars. Save that for next week.

Union Station is open for studying, but students should try to keep conversations quiet. You are not the only one attempting to study.

The K-State Student Union is not the only place you can study.

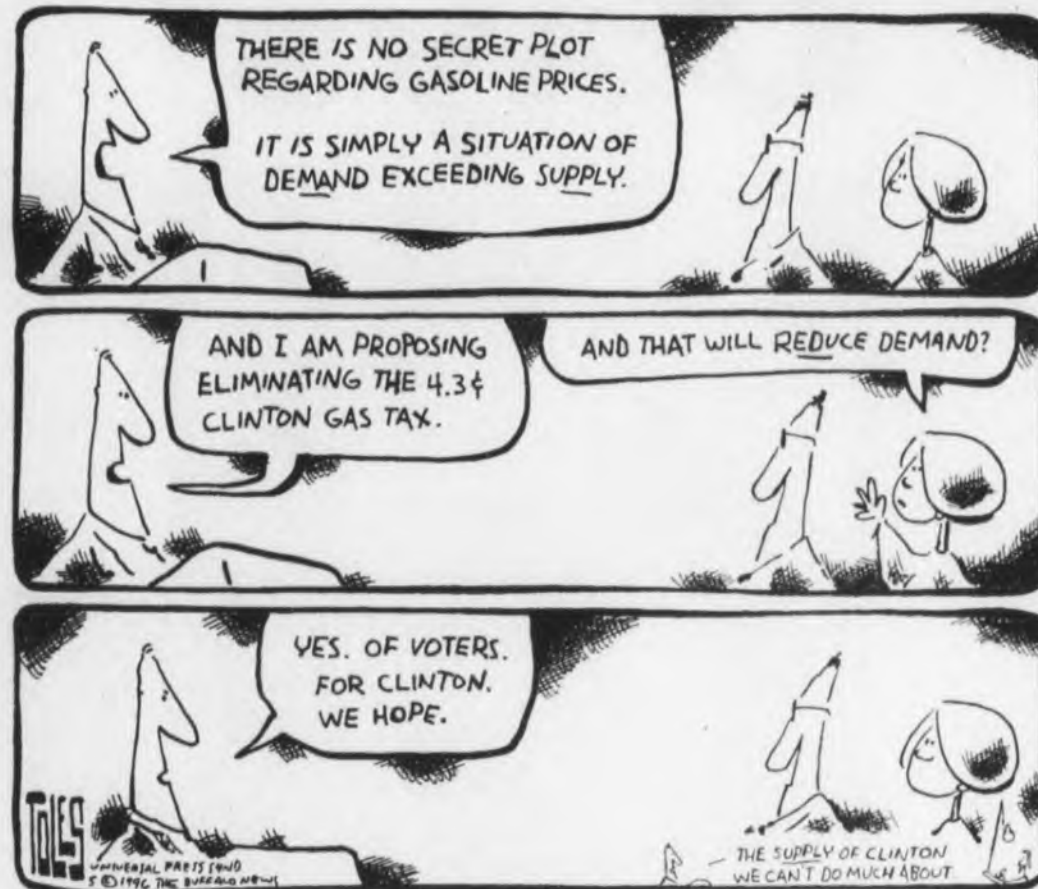

Obviously, Farrell Library would be a quiet place, but the Manhattan Public Library is also available.

If caffeine is a staple in your studying routine, there are always Espresso Royale Caffe and Java Espresso and Bakery in Aggieville. Java will be open 24 hours a day during finals week.

Try studying in a bar during off hours, or go to Village Inn, Bob's Diner or Country Kitchen before the after-bar breakfast rush starts.

If solar energy is something that will get you going, take a few friends out to City Park, Tuttle Creek Reservoir or any other parks in Manhattan. It is safer than studying alone and definitely more fun.

Why I don't write headlines always feel like I have left too much unsaid at the end of every semester.

In the past, though, I have always thought, "I'm never going to graduate. I'll just write it next semester."

This time, though, I have somehow managed to stumble across a diploma, and it is time for me to depart. This leaves me with several things I still really, really want to write, and only one column in which to write them.

Myview

JASON Hamilton

You will get to see just what you are missing out on. You will also get to see exactly why I do not get to write my own headlines.

MARS NEEDS WOMEN

Recently, I was criticized, publicly and privately, for my stance on crazy people who call themselves environmentalists. I disagree with my critics. These people do exist in large numbers on this campus.

My intention was to warn readers against confusing these people with real environmentalists. I agree with my critics, however, that maybe I should not confuse myself with real environmentalists.

I did resent the remark about how stupid I was to think we could transport energy from space to the ground, though. It was not my idea. NASA has developed preliminary plans for a solar-power array that beams its power to the earth via microwaves.

The problem with space is not getting power or things down to earth, but getting them up into orbit. We need to build a huge electromagnetic ramp or a space elevator. Sure, it would be expensive, but if we put real money into space, we would be paid back in 10 years. In 50 years, our productive capacity would have grown so much the original cost would seem like, well, a few colored beads.

It would be like the Louisiana Purchase of the solar system. For the environment and humanity, moving into space will eventually be essential, so the country that does it first will be set for centuries.

U.S. GOVERNMENT GASES OWN CITIZENS ... USING UNLEADED

This claptrap about the gasoline tax is insane. Do people think paying $1 a gallon is their God-given right? All through the last decade, prices have gone up, wages have gone up, fuel efficiency has gone up and gas prices have stayed level.

That is not the way the free market works, boys and girls. Cutting the gas tax will probably just mean a huge windfall for the oil companies.

Cutting taxes in general seems silly to me. We have the lowest tax burden of any industrialized nation (the lowest gas taxes, too), and the largest deficit. Coincidence?

D.A.R.E. JUNKIES IMPOSE NAZI STATE

Let's ignore the fact that marijuana is safer, healthier and more useful than ethyl alcohol. Let's ignore the fact the anti-marijuana sentiment in this country was started by a man who just wanted to regain the power he lost when prohibition was repealed. Instead, let's look at why it is financially imperative marijuana remain illegal.

Did you know police departments around the country make millions of dollars by seizing the property of drug offenders? In fact, without this money, they would have to lay off a lot of cops, and they would not be able to afford those shiny new cars and guns.

Think about that the next time Sgt. Stanley tells you just how evil marijuana is. Then look at his D.A.R.E. button or the D.A.R.E. logo on the side of the Corvette they seized, and think about the fact D.A.R.E. is funded almost entirely by beer companies. Of course, beer companies are not like tobacco companies. They would never lie to us.

AIDS IS AIDS IS AIDS

There are some pretty smart scientists, in America and elsewhere, who do not think HIV causes AIDS. Do the National Institutes of Health take this seriously? Hell, no.

American pharmaceutical companies make a whole lot of money selling dangerous drugs (like AZT) to treat AIDS. At the same time, the NIH is only interested in one avenue of research, one that many people think is just wrong. Coincidence?

If there is one theme to all of these (and to many of my columns), it is, "Watch the money! That's where you'll get screwed!"

Any large amount of money is like a quickly flowing stream: The longer it flows in one direction, the deeper a groove it wears in the dirt and rock around it. Eventually, the resistance to changing the flow of the money is so great it is almost impossible to do, no matter how important the issue is.

When you think big business or government officials or even the police are acting in your best interests, watch the money. See where it flows and why. Then you will know what is really going on.

Thanks for reading. I had fun writing.

PROFESSOR ACCUSES WRITER OF PLAGIARIZING LETTER

Editor,

I am glad to read the letters and reports about the Taiwan issue in the Collegian. I think the debate about an issue related to my home country is fascinating. People with different opinions about a particular issue can have an open mind and intellectual discussion — that is what a university is all about. This is one way we can avoid biased information being provided by the public.

However, I am disturbed by the letter written by Professor C.S. Chang. I want to make two points here.

First, Chang proposed that my "authoritarian way of thinking" was due to the fact I grew up in a "Communist-controlled society." I have to remind Chang that I cannot choose my birthplace just as I cannot choose my skin color.

An argument should not be based on this type of factor that one has no control of. I can understand why he wanted to use this out-of-date tactic. This is exactly what I call Cold-War mentality, the origin of the bias against mainland Chinese people.

It seems to me that a group of people in this world have decided that once you are somehow related to Communism, you are naturally guilty of many things, much like if you have a different skin color, you have to be different.

I would like to tell Chang he singled out more than 1.2 billion people who grew up in that "Communist-controlled society." They are ordinary human beings, not monsters. They think in various ways.

Second, I would like to point out that Chang, with an unauthoritarian way of thinking, plagiarized from Ji-chang Yang's letter published in the March 25 issue of USA Today for half his letter.

Enclosed, please find a copy of Ji-chang Yang's letter. From the fifth paragraph to the seventh, the word in Chang's letter are almost exactly the same as Yang's letter. I do not believe this could be a coincidence.

Does that mean unauthoritarian way of thinking? Thank God! I would prefer my "authoritarian way" with which I at least can think and write using my own mind and words.

Here I have to remind Chang that as a K-State faculty member, it is important for us to set a good model for the students by maintaining our own intellectual integrity and honesty, not by practicing plagiarism.

Please remember this Chinese proverb: "The only way that you can avoid people knowing about what you have done behind them is not to do it."

SOUTHWEST KANSAS DOESN'T NEED EDUCATING

Editor,

In response to Scott Allen Miller's column, "Educating Southwest Kansas," I do not agree with what was stated.

Being from Garfield, a farming community of 300 residents, I had no problem choosing to attend K-State. Driving a distance of 300 miles is worth the time and effort for receiving a college degree. People from small towns can pursue higher education, and just about every student experiences some form of your so-called "brain drain."

Farmers in southwest Kansas are not under-educated. If you would take the time to view the acres of farmland, you would see how productive these farmers are. Farmers do make high profits and make every effort toward conservation. Many farmers are already implementing soil and water conservation by planting windbreaks, using no-till farming to decrease soil erosion and turning once-farmed fields into grass through the CRP program.

People from southwest Kansas are no different from people from northeast, southeast or northwest Kansas. In fact, maybe our schooling there is more effective because of smaller class sizes. And nothing is wrong with attending Fort Hays State University. FHSU's Agricultural Research Farm is associated with K-State's. By putting down FHSU, you are putting down K-State.

Since you feel you have all the answers to educating southwest Kansas, I invite Miller to try to last one day or possibly one week, on my family's farm. Maybe then you will realize that farmers are educated, productive and already increase the quality of life for everyone. Without farmers, no one could survive.

Big dreams encouraged by lottery ticket

You can buy all your dreams for a dollar.

Your odds of getting struck by lightning twice are better than your odds of winning a Powerball jackpot, but who cares? Someone will have the luck or receive the divine intervention to pick the right five numbers and the Powerball to win.

Somebody has to win eventually, and it may as well be me. Or you.

Most people I know share my laid-back attitude about Powerball. I do not even consider it gambling. Gambling is when you wager money on something you have some odds at winning. Most of us pay a dollar at a chance to fulfill all our dreams even though we know the odds are stacked against us. I guess the payoff, millions of dollars for a measly buck, makes the gamble worth trying.

There are serious Powerball players out there, methodically picking out numbers using birth dates of loved ones, ages of their children or other numbers of personal significance. I know a guy who has had 37 sexual partners, and his lottery numbers are the numbers of the women who were the most pleasurable.

Me, I choose what they call the Quick Pick. You have the exact same odds of winning with the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 as you do with any other set of numbers. I let the computer pick for me. Then, if I lose, it is not my fault.

For a few moments after buying a ticket we are all winners. We dream of the good life. We discuss with our friends what we would do with that much money. We detail our every moment after knowing we have beat the odds.

Who would you call first after your numbers were announced? Think about what the answer to that question says about the importance of that person in your life.

Some people talk about how much money they would settle for. If you pick five numbers and not the Powerball, you win $100,000. "I really only need $100,000," my sister claims. However, I am a greedy little bitch and want the big prize. The really big prize, like $84 million.

I have learned much about the personalities of my friends and family during these conversations about how they would spend their lottery winnings. I knew my boyfriend and I were a real couple when he talked about "us" spending his $17 million Powerball prize.

When I win the lottery, and I will someday, I have a few ideas of my own. I would settle for a little more than $10 million. After taxes I would receive about $500,000 a year. I could live off that.

First, I would call my boyfriend. He could handle the business end of all that money, investments and stuff.

Then I would take my sons on the biggest shopping spree a child could ever want. We would buy that cool bed that looks like a race car and a television to hang from the ceiling, so as to not get in the way of the business of playing.

I would, of course, have the usual array of plastic surgeries and other self-serving indulgences.

The only bitter and sick thing I would do is buy 30 minutes of air time on network television to produce my own little television show titled "The People Who Can Kiss My Ass." It would feature people like my high school counselors and my stepfather.

With that much money you are allowed to be a bit rude. If you are poor it is being rude, if you are rich it is being eccentric.

Today I will buy my ticket for Wednesday's drawing. I will dream, hope, pray and maybe do a voodoo dance until then. The actual drawing of the numbers is a let down. I never win.

Somebody has to win. Please let it be me this time.

Group discusses minority coverage in Collegian

Tom Roesler
staff reporter

Last Friday, a forum to announce the kick-off of the third Purple Power weekend turned into a discussion about the way Hispanics and other minority groups are treated in the media.

Mike Marlett, editor of the Collegian, was there to field questions. The first question was why the only coverage of minorities in the media is negative.

Marlett said it is hard for someone not in a certain community to find the positive stories and sometimes the negative stories are the only ones that get attention.

"One thing I have found more than anything is that if you're not a member of a specific community, you don't see the events happen," Marlett said.

Marlett said space in the paper was also a problem. With more than 370 groups on campus, it is hard to know about everything going on and also to fit them all in, he said.

Anita Cortez, coordinator of the Pilots program at K-State, said she felt that was not a good excuse and emphasized the feeling of Hispanics being invisible in the media.

"You say that there isn't enough room. It seems that there is always room to cover negative stories," Cortez said.

"Latinos are invisible in the public. As a journalist, it's your job to find out about them. I don't take that as an excuse for a lack of coverage."

Marlett said sometimes stories about violence run because that is what people will read. Not many people would read stories about forums, but many would read about a riot.

He said it did not even matter if it was a minority group who was doing it.

"If you called and said there were students rioting, we'd be there like that," Marlett said.

"It's even juicier if it's a black or Hispanic student," said Ian Bautista, graduate student in planning, adding onto Marlett's statement.

Bautista's wife, Elsa Diaz-Bautista, graduate student in business, said she felt strongly about what Ian had said.

"You might disagree, but we have lived it. We have lived it," Diaz-Bautista said.

Many people in the group said they felt there needed to be a call for equality in coverage in the media for every minority group.

Marlett said he encouraged minorities to get involved in the Collegian.

The reason for the forum was to announce the start of Purple Power weekend, which involved several planned events.

Friday night there was a barbecue at Tuttle Creek followed by a party.

Saturday, softball and other games were to be played at City Park, and later there was another party in the evening.

This was all centered around the celebration of Cinco de Mayo Sunday with a barbecue and picnic.

Cinco de Mayo is a celebration of when the Mexican army, greatly outnumbered and outgunned, defeated the French at Puebla, Mexico, on May 5, 1862.

After the victory, Mexico soon gained its independence from the French Empire.

Residents question revisions of contract

Richea Lecklider
staff reporter

Putnam Hall residents voted late last week concerning revisions to be made to the R.E.S.P.E.C.T. agreement that is in effect at the hall.

The outcome of the voting is not yet known.

"Putnam is unique in that it has its own R.E.S.P.E.C.T. agreement," said Donna Peters, junior in elementary education and Revisions Committee member.

R.E.S.P.E.C.T. stands for Residents Encouraging Study, Peaceful Environment and Community Thinking, Peters said.

The agreement involves a 24-hour quiet time at Putnam. Residents must also provide one educational or cultural program each year for all the other residents of Putnam, as well as attending four of the programs done by other residents.

If the program requirement is not completed by a resident, that person is not allowed to live in Putnam the following year, she said.

Peters said each resident must sign a R.E.S.P.E.C.T. agreement upon moving into Putnam.

Residents decided some revisions needed to be made to the agreement.

A revision committee was devised of students and staff advisers. Its goal was to gain as much student input as possible.

"The past agreement didn't really fit the lifestyle or needs of students who currently live in the hall," Barbara Ullmer, assistant director of Strong Complex and Putnam Hall, said.

Ullmer said surveys were given to the residents in October and again in March concerning input on the revisions of the agreement.

She said the first agreement was written many years ago, and with the constant change of the student population, revisions were necessary.

Peters said revisions would be made by combining some of the rules so hopefully students can be trusted to make some decisions and monitor themselves on their own.

"We tried to take small steps so it wasn't a major overhaul," she said.

Peters said the committee tried to get rid of some of the nit-picky rules of the original agreement.

"The main purpose of the R.E.S.P.E.C.T. agreement is to get people to communicate with one another and to basically monitor themselves," Peters said.

Preparing for finals

Here are some studying tips for surviving the panic of finals week.

Improve your concentration

- Take short breaks. Get up and walk around the room for a couple of minutes.
- Change topics. Changing subjects every one or two hours can increase some students' concentration.
- Use incentives and rewards. Give yourself a reward if you complete a difficult task or finish studying.

Source: University Counseling Services

Choose a productive place to study

- Work in a well-lit area.
- Sit on a sturdy chair at a table — comfortable chairs will make you tired.
- Sit up straight to keep focused.
- Clear away all distractions.
- Put in background music or noise if it aides your concentration.

Studying the textbook

- Study small pieces of the assignment at a time thoroughly enough to pass a test immediately after studying it.
- Turn each section heading into a question, and study to answer that question.

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

Planning ahead will help with finals

Khristi Shell
staff reporter

It is that time of semester again, the time of stress, cramming and little sleep.

Finals week is the time that most students start to tense up and panic as the end of the semester draws near.

This is the time that most students go into finals without having done much the whole semester up until now, Fred Newton, director of Counseling Services, said.

When students start at ground zero, it is hard to remember enough information to survive and pass, he said. Occasionally, there are some students capable of doing that.

These students are the ones who pull all-nighters trying to cram every bit of information into their mind.

"I say, well, an all-nighter is not really productive," Newton said. "When you study, for example, your mind is at its peak for maybe two hours, and if you try to study for longer periods without any kind of real break or any kind of sleep, the learning curve goes down dramatically," he said.

By cramming and avoiding sleep, students are worse off going into a test.

"They are going into a test with a lethargic mind, not being very alert, and so they are more susceptible to go blank, to get anxious — to do a lot of things that are self-defeating," Newton said.

"So waiting to the last minute, pulling all-nighters and doing other kinds of things are certainly not very productive," he said.

Another thing a lot of students do is to not take care of themselves properly.

"People throw out all their maintenance tasks like eating right, getting sleep and exercising," Newton said.

Students need to maintain reasonable habits, he said.

The pop-and-candy bar diet is a no-no.

Students need to get a head start in studying.

Newton said students should use strategies, start studying in the last 10 days before finals and review the material the day before the test.

When studying, avoid lying on the bed or sitting at a desk with distracting pictures or letters that draw attention.

"A lot of people will lay down on their bed," Newton said. "The stimulus for lying on your bed is to go to sleep."

"So usually, people will read about three pages and all of a sudden doze off."

Whether it is with music, complete silence, a certain chair or a library, students need to learn what is the right studying atmosphere for them.

You kind of have to know your response to certain kinds of situations if you want to maximize your studying, Newton said.

Criminals not assets to teams

I am tired of reading about athletes involved in cases of physical assault, drug violations and other crimes.

I am tired of hearing coaches say they are willing to give criminals a second, third or fourth chance and allowing them to stay on their teams.

Last week, as the National Basketball Association playoffs began and the Stanley Cup Playoffs were in full swing, I was subjected to headlines about former UMKC basketball star Tony Dumas, now with the Dallas Mavericks, punching his pregnant girlfriend in the stomach.

There should be enough sports news naturally occurring with the NBA and NHL playoffs, the Kentucky Derby and even football with the World League in full swing.

I should be reading about Hakeem Olajuwon's sweet hook shot and the heart of the defending world champion Houston Rockets.

Instead, I come across coverage of a seemingly heartless Dumas, whose team had one of the worst records in the NBA and is no longer competing.

I see the Michael Irvin and Bam Morris drug charge stories, or the Tony Dumas and Lawrence Phillips battery-charge stories.

Sadly, when I think of a case of criminal activity by an athlete, I always picture a coach by that athlete's side, preaching the gospel of granting second chances.

The funny thing is I have never heard a coach say a criminal deserves a second chance unless he finds out that criminal can slam-dunk a basketball or throw a 95-mph fastball.

Maybe it starts as early as high school. Even at that level of athletics, coaches need their best players on the field, and the best players know their coaches will bail them out of trouble to keep them eligible for the big games.

Most high school athletes use this system to get away with harmless acts like cutting class or acting up in class, but it sets a dangerous precedent of giving athletes an above-the-law status.

The fact is, if society did not offer athletes second chances, they would not take advantage of the system of second chances.

Surely there are exceptions, and people make mistakes, but athletes should not be afforded special privileges because they are physically gifted.

If we give athletes an above-the-law status, then we should also grant asylum from the law to members of the K-State national champion debate team for its intellectual prowess.

If anything, athletes should be under tighter scrutiny than average citizens. I do not care what Charles Barkley says — he is a role model whether he likes it or not, as are all high-profile athletes.

As players are entering the professional ranks at an increasingly younger age, we need to be careful of how they are treated.

Certainly, we do not need to create a system that controls the personal life of players, but we also do not need to perpetuate a system that encourages criminal behavior by administering slap-on-the-wrist type punishments to offenders.

Players have lengthy contracts allowing them clauses for injuries and incentives to play their best.

Contracts should also be written to absolve teams from financial responsibility to players who commit crimes.

This would enable owners to worry more about what is best for society and less about the bottom line — money.

I would rather have kids emulate players on a hardworking team that struggles to win than those on a team full of stars with a blatant disregard for the law.

The New England Patriots appear to be on the right track. After drafting Nebraska linebacker Christian Peter last month, the Patriots released him when they learned the entirety of his extensive criminal record.

Sadly, Peter will be picked up by another NFL team and given yet another chance to commit a crime, but perhaps the Patriots sent an important message to players.

Criminals are a liability to a team — not an asset.

A group led by Ross Perot Jr. recently purchased the Mavericks. This is a golden opportunity for the new ownership to make a similar statement by releasing Dumas unconditionally.

If I have to read a feature about a sports personality, I would prefer a story about David Robinson's appearance on Sesame Street or Troy Aikman signing autographs for Oklahoma City bombing victims.

There are countless ways sports can help society, yet we have found a way to use it as an excuse for violence and degradation.

Give me more coverage of Cincinnati Bengals running back Ki Jana Carter and his battle to overcome knee surgery and less coverage of St. Louis Rams' newly drafted running back Lawrence Phillips and his battle to overcome bad press he created for himself by beating his ex-girlfriend.

Bittersweet loss for Cats' netters

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

One match would decide if the K-State women's tennis team would pull off one of the biggest upsets in school history.

One match would decide who would advance to the finals of the NCAA Central Regional's finals.

But with Maria Abatjoglou and Amy Trytek's win against K-State's Dinah Watson and Chris Schulte, it was just another heart-breaking loss for the Wildcats. The triumph gave Kansas a 5-4 victory against the Cats in the NCAA Central Regional semifinals.

In the first set of the No. 3 doubles match, Watson and Schulte were up 5-4, serving for the set. The duo was broken and would lose the set 7-5.

Watson and Schulte breezed through the second set, taking the set 6-2.

Both teams battled in the third set, breaking each other's serves. At 4-3, the Kansas duo was able to break Watson and Schulte to go up 5-3. The other Jayhawk and Cat players lined up on the next court to watch the deciding games.

At deuce in the pivotal ninth game, Trytek served up an ace, blazing past Schulte's racquet. That set up match-point for Kansas. A wide return on Trytek's next serve gave the Jayhawks the match.

On one end of the court, Kansas coach Chuck Merzbacher threw his hat in the air in jubilation and relief. Kansas players jumped and cheered. On the other side were the dejected faces of a team that had played what it thought was its best match and come so close to an upset against the top-seeded team.

"We knew that the whole thing came down to our match," Watson said. "We were definitely feeling a bit of the pressure."

The Kansas duo said it always thought it would pull off the win.

"When it comes down to crunch time, that's when we are at our best," Abatjoglou said. "Throughout the match, we always knew that we were going to win. We are just confident in our abilities."

Kansas looked to wrap things up early, taking four of the first five singles matches. But sophomore Yana Dorodnova kept the Cats alive with a thrilling come-from-behind victory at No. 2 singles against Christie Sim.

Dorodnova lost the first set 6-3 but breezed through the second set 6-1. Dorodnova mixed up her game in the third, taking the set and match 7-5.

"Yana was exceptional in the way she changed her game to dictate what terms the match would be played," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

"She changed the pace, played some high balls, some low balls. She kept it from being a slugging match."

The other singles victory the Cats earned came in the No. 4 spot. Watson backed up her Big 8 singles award with a commanding 6-3, 6-2 victory over Kansas' Bianca Kirchhof.

Going into the doubles portion of the match, the Jayhawks had a 4-2 edge against the Cats. The Cats knew they would need to sweep all three doubles matches to win.

K-State's doubles teams came out swinging.

At No. 1 doubles, senior Karina Kuregian and sophomore Lena Pilipchak quickly disposed of the 13th-ranked Kylie Hunt and Jenny Atkerson. Kuregian and Pilipchak cruised to a straight set victory 6-2, 6-4.

"This was the best doubles we had played all year," Kuregian said.

"We wanted to come out and play aggressive. We thought we could give them some trouble."

Yet another thrilling match was at the No. 2 doubles spot. Dorodnova and junior Karen Nicholson took to the courts to take on Sim and Kirchhof.

The Cat duo took the first set 6-2. In the second, Sim and Kirchhof were able to come back and take the set 6-4. The third was tight throughout the set, but Dorodnova and Nicholson prevailed 7-6 (7-2).

Earlier in the year, the Jayhawks had defeated the Cats two times, 5-2 and 4-0. But Merzbacher said he expected a hard-fought match from the Cats.

"KSU had nothing to lose," he said.

"They played great at the end, they were just flat-out going for everything."

K-State had advanced to the semifinal match with a 5-0 drumming against Utah. It was the second time this season the 44th-ranked Cats had beaten the Utes.

Despite the tough loss, Bietau said he was pleased with his team's performance.

"The most important thing was that getting to this tournament was one of our goals this season," he said. "We played extremely well — our best match of the year."

Cats dominate 1st home meet

■ Women's team dominates KSU Open, K-State's first home event

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

Last weekend's KSU Open accomplished its purpose — to prepare the K-State track and field team for next week's dual meet against Nebraska and the upcoming Big 8 Championships.

The meet, K-State's first home event of the year, gave Wildcat athletes a chance to compete on familiar territory for the first time this season.

"Overall, the meet went pretty well," Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "We tried to focus on running a lot of kids against each other."

The meet also highlighted the strength of K-State's women's team, one of the top teams in the nation in dual meet competition.

"The reality is the women's team is pretty good," Rovelto said. "On the men's side, we've redshirted some people. We've tried to map out a strategy for competing in the Big 12. It'll be the best conference in track in the nation."

"Our budget just doesn't compare (with other Big 12 schools), but there's nothing we can do."

With the majority of athletes hailing from K-State, K-Staters picked up several first-place finishes on both the men's and women's side.

Highlighting the meet was a possible berth in Olympic track and field trials for a K-State freshman. Renetta Seiler won the women's discus competition with a distance of 171 feet, 5 inches, which should earn her a berth in the NCAA Championships and gives her a chance at going to this summer's Olympic trials, Rovelto said.

"It's a very quality mark," Rovelto said.

Seiler also picked up a personal record and first-place finish in the hammer throw with a mark of 166'8" to continue the successful weekend for the Wildcats.

Other K-Staters to pick up first-place finishes on the women's side went to Jennifer Gruver (400-meter hurdles, 1:01.34; 800-meter run, 2:17.45) and Vanitta Kinard (triple jump, 41'10").

Leading the way on the men's side was Gene Peterson, who captured the discus competition with a distance of 174'10".

"Gene Peterson had a great discus throw (Saturday)," Rovelto said.

Other first-place finishes on the men's side went to Jeff Martin (400-meter hurdles, 53.57), Marshall Grayson (long jump, 23'6 1/4"), David Dominguez (1,500-meter run, 3:52.99) and Scott Galas (800-meter run, 1:54.94).

In the KSU Pentathlon Sunday, only one K-Stater placed. Sophomore Matt Jeffrey snagged second with 3,382 points.

K-State will face Nebraska in a dual meet Thursday in Manhattan. The meet will be the final tune-up for the Cats before heading to the Big 8 Championships, slated for May 20-21 in Lincoln, Neb.

"They have a team that can do it all," Rovelto said. "They can compete at nationals, do well at the conference level and do well at dual meets."

"We try to have a good dual meet team, to have someone compete in all events. But at the same time, it's still important how we do at conference and to get kids to nationals. Up to this point, dual and conference have been our focus, and nationals have been gravy, but that might change in the future."

We've tried to map out a strategy for competing in the Big 12. It'll be the best conference in track in the nation.

Tour performs unique improv, involves audience

Abbi Hake
staff writer

The actor pointed accusingly up at the little boy in the third row.

"And then the whining schoolboy, with his satchel and shining morning face, creeping like a snail unwillingly to school," recited the actor.

The boy, somewhat surprised, looked pointedly back at the actor, sat straight up in his chair, his two little hands pointed at himself.

"Me?" he asked sitting up alertly.

The little boy then smiled, shook his head and pointed back at his accuser.

"No, you!" he said.

The audience roared at his response.

And this was not the only time.

Time and again the actors and actresses of the Shenandoah Shakespeare Express involved the audience and at the same time, made them laugh.

Friday night's performance of "As You Like It" in Nichols Theatre was Shakespeare at its best.

The small company of performers made it look fun and incredibly easy.

They moved at an unbelievable speed to fit the play into two hours without sacrificing any comprehension of the language.

They galloped around the theater, running energetically up and down the steps, yet careful not to disturb the actors and actresses on stage.

The performance was choreographed so well, yet it appeared that many times they would improvise to make the play a unique experience for the audience.

This is probably how Shakespeare intended his plays to be performed.

Don Hedrick, director of cultural studies, said the small company of 12 individuals, including the director, is probably about the size it would have been in Shakespeare's day.

Another characteristically 17th-century quality of the performance was the lighting.

When the play began, no lights dimmed to cut off the audience from the actors and actresses.

Instead, the lights remained constant so the audience would be part of the show.

Shakespearean plays allow room for versatility. The company showed it had the ability to emphasize it through its costumes.

They were incredibly simple.

Most of the male characters wore khaki slacks and red shirts.

The female actors wore simple modern dresses.

The Shenandoah Shakespeare Express' stop in Manhattan was part of a national tour of three plays, "As You Like It," "Julius Caesar," which the company performed Thursday night and "Henry IV," which it did not perform at K-State.

The company is based in Harrisonburg, Va., where these 11 actors and actresses are chosen out of an auditioning group of 2,000-3,000 people.

With such a large pool of actors and actresses from which to choose, it is obvious why this company of young thespians is so talented.

They made Shakespeare enjoyable and more importantly understandable, even to the little boy in the third row.

K-State was lucky to be host to such a group. Hopefully, it will grace us with its presence again in the future.

Musician plays Latin-style jazz

QUICKread

Fatima Johnson
contributing writer

David Sanchez got his big start touring with the late jazz great Dizzie Gillespie. As a result his music shows a heavy preference for the graceful lounge-style improvisation laymen typically associate with the term "jazz."

For an untrained ear, it might seem the only variance is in tempo and intensity, and a near-random air presides. In spite of Sanchez's immense talent as a musician, there is often a feeling of repetitiveness to the album.

The pieces on the album sound as if Sanchez siphoned his soul straight through his sax, right in the middle of the studio.

Like a more versatile Jimi Hendrix, his musicianship must provide an incredible experience to those listening to him live.

A former congo player, Sanchez incorporates traditional Latin percussion into his compositions and performances.

This unexpected and surprisingly smooth addition gives the pieces a fun, quirky twist.

In addition, his experience with percussion seems to have given Sanchez a fabulous sense of rhythm.

Many of the pieces have some intriguing plays with beat and tone.

The two kick-off songs on the album, "Africa Y Las Americas" and "Bomba Blues" are great examples of this.

Sketches of Dreams

of a possible 5 CDs

The former has an almost Latin cocktail sound.

Also worth checking out is track six, "Mal Social," meaning "Social Malady" in English.

This song was composed as an attempt to depict the frustrations and problems of our society, from the jumpy, chopped tempo to the screaming, crying sax to the abrupt interjections throughout the song.

Sanchez accomplishes this to the minute detail.

Despite possessing stand-out pieces such as these, "Sketches of Dreams" needs more variety and texture between the pieces.

However, Sanchez's musicianship and style is definitely worth the experience.

Sanchez has also released an album titled "The Departure."

Research examines religion of women

■ Spirituality, dealing with abuse subject of research by professor

L. L. Livengood
staff reporter

A K-State professor will be spending her summer studying the Native American women of the Fort Peck reservation in Montana.

Karen Baird-Olson, K-State assistant professor of sociology, and Carol Ward of Brigham Young's sociology department were awarded a $42,000 grant from the Louisville Institute for the Study of Protestantism and American Culture. The project began in January.

They will be studying the spiritual beliefs of the women on reservations and how these spiritual beliefs helped them cope with discrimination, domestic violence and substance abuse.

Baird-Olson said her previous research showed women who survived most constructively have a strong spiritual background that says they are significant.

"I've found that women with more traditional Sioux religious practices or a combination of traditional with Christianity did better," Baird-Olson said.

She said these traditional practices taught them women were as valuable and strong as men.

Native American women functioning under fundamentalist teaching did not do as well because they had internalized they were inferior to men, Baird-Olson said.

During spring break, the sociologists began making arrangements to be on the reservations for a couple of months this summer.

Baird-Olson will be on the Fort Peck reservation, while Ward will be on the Northern Cheyenne reservation.

Baird-Olson said she hopes to bring focus groups from one reservation to another to discuss their beliefs.

While at the reservations, the sociologists will continue to use qualitative research methodology.

This includes in-depth, open-ended interviews, focus groups and participant observation.

Baird-Olson, who is from Fort Peck, said she had previously used interviews and participant observation and will switch to focus groups this summer.

Ward will switch from focus groups to interviews and participant observation.

"Having lived in Fort Peck, I've had lots of years of observation," Baird-Olson said.

She said they will also engage in participatory research where they will allow the women in the focus groups to view the researchers' original draft and decide if that is what they really wanted to say, giving the women a form of empowerment.

"In the past, researchers have come in and come up with conclusions that anyone on a reservation would laugh about," Baird-Olson said.

She said these researchers did not understand the purpose of some of the activities that go on at a reservation, such as a powwow.

This is what the researchers are trying to avoid. Their completion date is December as set by the funding agency.

Their research will be used by churches associated with the funding agency to determine how to best serve Native American women. It will also be used for non-pastoral counseling.

"In terms of social change, it's an interest to sociologists," Baird-Olson said.

Panhandler wins suit in right-to-beg trial

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Had panhandler Gerry Mazer collected his settlement in quarters from a lawsuit against the city about a begging ordinance, he would have needed more than his usual plastic cup to carry it.

Mazer pocketed $3,000 in his successful quest to overturn the city's anti-begging ordinance.

His lawyers were paid $3,265, according to documents released this week by the city.

Mazer, 45, sued the city in January, saying the anti-begging law was unconstitutional.

He said the law infringed on his right to free speech and free expression. The city agreed.

In March, city lawyers settled the case for an undisclosed "small sum" of money.

The settlement was contingent on the city's repealing its anti-begging ordinance, which had been on the books since 1956.

On April 18, the Kansas City Council approved a more specific anti-begging ordinance and repealed the old one.

This week, both the city and Mazer's lawyers filed their settlement in federal court, dropping the lawsuit.

Mazer declined to comment on the settlement.

His lawyer, Fred L. Slough, said he was pleased.

"We achieved everything we set out to do," Slough said.

"Gerry was a real good client. He wasn't greedy. This was never about money."

If he had been greedy, I probably wouldn't have done the case."

Mazer has been known to verbally abuse people who passed him by.

When he filed the lawsuit and a story appeared about it in the Kansas City Star, dozens of people called the newspaper with stories of his profane behavior.

Slough said he was amazed by the criticism he received for representing Mazer.

"Some people seem to think I should have taken a popularity poll before deciding whether to represent him," Slough said.

"Even some civil libertarians told me they didn't think it was a high-priority issue."

Slough acknowledged that he might face further criticism for the legal fees he and his partner in the case, Stephen Douglas Bonney, were paid. He said they were paid $150 an hour plus expenses for about 20 hours of work.

"I'll bet you we spent double that in time," Slough said.

The old city ordinance, one sentence long, banned begging "upon any street, sidewalk, park or public square or any other public place."

Courts in other cities have ruled that such an undefined law could prohibit solicitations for charities or a person's right to speak freely, even offensively.

The new law states, "It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit money or other things of value, or to solicit the sale of goods or services, in an aggressive manner in a public area."

It also bans begging on public transportation, near automated teller machines and on private property.

The term "aggressive manner" is defined at length and is meant to include "threatening approaches," following, physical contact, "continuing to solicit," verbal threats and blocking the sidewalk or street.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

Mark Gudenkauf, junior in construction science, tries to elude Shane Ondrako, freshman in sociology, during the K-State Rugby Club practice Saturday at Memorial Stadium. This weekend the club will travel to Chicago to compete in the Sweet Sixteen National Rugby Tournament.

Team to compete in Sweet 16

John Berggren
staff writer

For the K-State rugby team, Christmas has come seven months early.

The team, after taking third at Westerns last week, figured its season to be through, and it was time to start planning the postseason parties.

But Friday, K-State learned the second-place team, Queen City, had illegal players and lost by default.

K-State will be in Queen City's place at the Sweet Sixteen National Competition this weekend in Chicago.

Rugby team member Andy Rumgay, senior in psychology, said teams had to play by the rules.

"You have to abide by the rules," Rumgay said. "Players have to pay their membership to the rugby association, and Queen City had several players who did not pay their dues. It's unfortunate for them, but it's part of the game."

With the team going to nationals, enthusiasm among the players has sky-rocketed.

"It's like Lazarus has come out of his grave," said team captain Jeremy Gillespie, research assistant in biochemistry.

"We definitely want to go to Chicago and show that we are the best team in the West."

Mike Skahan, graduate student in speech, had the same assessment to offer.

"It seems like everybody is a lot more together now," Skahan said. "The team is a lot more positive, and now we can see a goal. We have something that we can work to accomplish, a shot at the finals in nationals."

The rugby club's all-time best finish came in 1981, when the team finished fourth in the nation. Skahan's brother was on the 1981 team and said finishing as far as it did was not his main goal.

"We don't necessarily want to just go out and do better than the 1981 team did," Skahan said.

"For now we're working on getting sponsors for the team. For some reason over the years, the rugby team has been perceived as being not associated as being scholars. We have a wide assortment of people on this year's team, ranging from graduate students to Manhattan residents, to people from Fort Riley, to people with Ph.D.s."

The club's trip to Chicago this weekend is going to cost the team about $4,000.

For the team, it is money that it will be a chore to raise.

"We've been sponsored throughout the season by Lucky's, and now we're looking for more businesses to help us out," Skahan said.

"We've raised money through fundraisers, and the college has helped us out as much as it can, but we're still scrambling to find more sponsors."

"If we make it to the final four, we'll be starting from scratch trying to raise money to go back to Chicago for the finals."

while China has had wars with every neighbor, including India, Russia, Vietnam and Korea. Based on these differences, it is not difficult to understand why a large majority of people in Taiwan do not want to be ruled by communist China."

Chang said he had read the letter in USA Today.

"I read USA Today and New York Times, and I put some sentences together," he said. "I read a lot. I got some sentences from it. I don't see anything wrong with that."

He said only part of his letter was from USA Today, and he used it only because he felt it made a good point.

"There's one thing (in Chang's letter) related to USA Today. It's not exactly the same. I used it explain why people in Taiwan want to resist Communism," Chang said.

The Student Life Handbook defines plagiarism as:

"Plagiarism is the academic and literary equivalent of robbery, taking somebody else's property. If you copy somebody's test answers, take an essay from a magazine and pass it off as your own, lift a well-phrased sentence or two and include them without crediting the author or using quotation marks, or even pass off somebody's good ideas as examples of your own genius, you are guilty of intellectual thievery."

get reimbursement money for my tuition. It definitely helps me get through college."

This semester, Jones will also receive 100-percent reimbursement.

"Last semester, I got 75 percent back, and this semester I passed the 30-month mark and will be getting 100 percent," she said.

"The only thing that is hard is scheduling classes so I have lunches open to work, but it is worth it in the long run."

Burger King also offers a tuition reimbursement program for its employees.

"We started the program about six months ago," said Mike Pray, manager of the Burger King in Aggieville.

"We had two employees on it last semester, and we have two this semester."

Pray said the program was set up with no set limits, and there is only one basic requirement to meet.

"Employees on the reimbursement program have to be available to work a minimum of either four lunches, four closes or a combination of lunches and closes equal to four," he said.

"Each store sets up the terms separately based on the needs of the store during certain peak hours, and we are willing to work around schedules so as not to interfere with school."

Rather than base reimbursement on employment, Burger King's tuition program reimburses students with a certain amount of money based their grades.

playing cards. A jeep comes around the corner, and our lieutenant shouts, 'Attention!' Green said.

"Patton was in the jeep, and he hops out and screams at us, 'At ease, you sons of bitches! I sent you down here to rest, and I don't want no short-haired lieutenant telling you otherwise!'"

Some of the other stories told were not as amusing.

Frank Bradley, Manhattan resident, told a more somber tale.

"I can remember one morning we had a new replacement. He was around 18 years old. We were standing around when we heard a shell coming in. Of course, us with experience got into a hole as quick as we could," he said.

"After it was over, we got out, and there was this kid, lying on the ground dead with a hole in his head. He just didn't have the experience we did."

Bradley said his company never made it to the Battle of the Bulge.

"We lost 16 of 17 tanks on the way there," he said.

"I was one of five guys who weren't killed or injured."

The group was the first allied division to liberate a German concentration camp, capturing both Ohrdraf and Buchenwald camps.

Francis Gutsell, Fourth Division veteran, said Gen. Dwight Eisenhower and Patton toured the camp. Patton got sick and had to leave.

Patton had decided the troops should tour the camp so they would remember what they were fighting for, he said.

He also decided to take the German citizens who lived nearby into the camp to show them what their army had done.

Green said the mayor of a nearby town and his wife committed suicide the night after witnessing the horrors of the camp.

Carl Carlsen, Fourth Division veteran, remembered the camp's horrors.

"Before we got there, the Germans herded the prisoners who were still alive into the center of the camp and shot them. Only about 10 to 12 who had hidden were still alive when we got there," he said.

"They had bodies stacked like cord wood."

Green said one German S. S. troop was still alive when the American soldiers reached the camp.

"We let the prisoners have him. You can imagine what they did to him," he said.

Don Darrell, Fourth Division veteran, said the sight was horrifying.

"We went through the barracks and saw men too weak to move. I went in and brought them food," Darrell said.

"It turned your stomach."

Darrell said he had taken pictures of the concentration camp with a German camera he picked up during his tour.

"Some corporal went through my luggage and found the pictures," he said.

"The corporal said, 'Sergeant, the war's over. Don't take those home.'"

Green said sometimes reading and talking about the experience helps ease the anguish he feels.

"There's not a day where I don't think about what happened," he said. "And I don't want to forget."

Carlsen said it makes him angry when he hears people try to downplay the atrocities of the Nazi concentration camps.

"I wonder if anyone will even remember it after our generation is gone," he said.

During the reunion, the group toured the motor pool at Fort Riley and saw modern tanks.

Sgt. David Collins of the First Infantry Division at Fort Riley showed the group an Abrams tank.

"Can I get up and crawl into the turret?" Bradley asked.

"Students receiving A's get 100 percent back up to $250, B's get 80 percent and C's get 70 percent," Pray said.

Although the programs are set up differently, Amigos and Burger King are giving students an opportunity to work toward a college education.

"It is worth working at Amigos through college," Springer said.

"If another job came up that was in my major, I would probably take it, but for now, I can handle working at Amigos. Besides, you can't pass up free money."

Jones said she agreed the amount of money received was worth sticking around.

"Working at a fast-food place may not be an ideal job," she said, "but the money is worth it. I can handle making tacos for a little while longer."

He said although the amount of room inside is similar to the Sherman tanks, the tanks are remarkably different.

"We had a five-man crew. They only have a four-man crew now," Bradley said.

Collins said his tank has a stereo and coffee maker.

If the Fourth Division wanted coffee during World War II, it had to stop and use a Coleman stove to heat the water.

The group plans to meet again in late September in Rockford, Ill.

Mistake in line schedule leads to confusion about dead day

Sara Edwards
staff writer

K-State classes will run through Friday, May 10. A mistake in the spring 1996 line schedule as well as Friday's Collegian article has led to confusion for some students.

Item No. 5 under the spring 1996 final examination schedule in the line schedule states, "No courses shall meet after Wednesday, May 8, and all examinations should be given as scheduled."

Suzy Auten, administrative assistant to the provost, said the line schedule was incorrect and the Office of the Provost was notified early in the semester by the Registrar's Office that a misprint had occurred.

The Office of the Provost sent out a memo to the deans of all the colleges about the Friday's Collegian article, "What to do on dead day."

"The story suggests that Friday, May 10 is 'Dead Day.' This is not correct. Classes are scheduled to meet on May 10th," the memo states.

Gunile Devault, associate registrar, said that after the spring 1996 line schedule came out last fall, the office reviewed the printed copy and determined that there was a mistake.

Auten said item five was probably left in the line schedule because in the past there was a dead day on Thursday when finals started on Friday. This year, finals start on Monday.

DeVault agreed with Auten and said it was overlooked in the proofing process.

DeVault said that in a meeting with the dean's offices last fall she asked the deans to assist them by passing correct information on to students.

"We do the best we can to notify people," DeVault said. "I can't verify how it was spread after I passed it out."

Although students received misinformation, many deans said students had classes scheduled for Thursday and Friday as well as dates of finals in their syllabuses since the beginning of the semester.

Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said he relied on faculty to inform students that classes go through Friday.

Nicholls said he had been approached by faculty concerning the Collegian article, and some students had asked if classes ended on Wednesday.

Kay Stewart, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration, said she notified all business instructors of the correct dates, and she assumed most of them notified their students.

"Most of the students didn't think there was a problem," she said.

Hochhauser unsure if she will run again

Sarah Lunday
news editor

Long-term 66th district representative Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said she is indecisive about running for reelection this year.

"I'm not sure," Hochhauser said during a phone conversation Monday afternoon. "I think I will."

If she runs, the ticket will be split between her and former student body president Jeff Peterson.

Kansas Legislature wrapped up budget meetings Thursday night, which has given Hochhauser little time to think about a campaign.

But if she does run, she will run on the same platform she has previously: her record.

"I'm very proud of my record, and I'll be running on my record, if I run," she said.

Peterson, Hochhauser said, doesn't have a record in Manhattan.

"Jeff's entire role has been on campus, and he has not had a role in this community," she said. Hochhauser moved to Manhattan 11 years ago from North Carolina.

After spending six years in Manhattan, including two as K-State student body president, Peterson said he feels like he knows the community.

While in office, Peterson said he will listen to the community through intergovernmental meetings and local meetings.

More than half of the residents comprising the 66th district are 18 to 29 years old, which Peterson said allows him to relate well to their needs. Peterson is 23 years old now but will turn 24 before elections.

During his campaign, Peterson said he wants voters to realize he is not accepting any gifts.

"No PACS, no perks and no gifts. I think that's important to be a representative of the people," he said.

Hochhauser said her eight-year record as a 66th district representative is available to all who want to look. Peterson's record as K-State student body president is also public record.

Peterson's announcement will be at 4 p.m. today at the Ramada Inn.

Former head of CIA found dead

Associated Press

ROCK POINT, Md. — After an eight-day search involving divers, dogs and sonar equipment, the body of former CIA director William Colby was found facedown in a marshy riverbank Monday, near where he disappeared on a canoe outing.

Authorities said the 76-year-old retired spy-master was probably alive when he fell into the water, suffered hypothermia and drowned. There were no marks on the body to indicate foul play, Sheriff Fred Davis said.

"There is nothing unusual about this case at all," he said.

Colby, whose family owns a waterfront vacation home in this southern Maryland town, had been missing since April 27, when he told his wife by phone that he was going canoeing. She was out of town at the time.

His body was found on a secluded spit of beach about a half-mile from his home, 100 yards downstream of where his swamped canoe was discovered a day after he disappeared. No life jacket was found

SCOTT M. LADD/Collegian

With several decades of experience, George Wilcoxon returned to teaching at K-State following retirement. Wilcoxon, who teaches for free, teaches ancient history during the fall.

FORGONE RETIREMENT

"I saw what happened to so many of my friends after they retired. They seem to lose it."

Stacks of history books clutter his desk and a torn, yellow-tinted map of North America covers the wall.

Bits and pieces of history are spread throughout George Wilcoxon's office.

Wilcoxon, professor emeritus of history, has been a professor in the Department of History for 50 years.

Professor has taught for the past 12 years without pay

"I had been teaching at Hastings College in Nebraska," Wilcoxon said.

"I was told by the president at Hastings that a great many places were looking for faculty, and I could do much better for myself somewhere else."

The nudge from his past colleague led him to settle at K-State.

"I had several interested replies, but Kansas State happened to be the closest so I got on the bus and headed for Manhattan," he said.

"I started teaching here in May 1946."

After being a full-time professor for 38 years,

Wilcoxon retired in 1984. He has continued to teach for the last 12 years without pay.

"I retired in 1984, and I have been teaching ever since," he said.

"For one thing, I don't believe in retirement. I saw what happened to so many of my friends after they retired. They seem to lose it."

Wilcoxon said he did not want to end up that way, so he continued to teach.

"I decided I wanted to keep teaching as long as I could, as long as my health and mind would hold out," he said.

"I like teaching, and I like working with the students. I think working with young people keeps me sort of psychologically young."

Prior to retiring, Wilcoxon taught several history classes. Now he has cut back to teaching two.

"I did teach several things in European history before I retired," he said.

"The only courses that I have kept are my two specialties, History of Ancient Greece and History of Ancient Rome."

Besides narrowing the number of classes, Wilcoxon only offers his classes one semester.

"I have it arranged now so that I teach those in the fall semester, and then I lay out in the spring semester and just do research," he said.

"The main idea behind that mostly is because I like to avoid the ice and snow of January and February, and I have relatives out in California, so I go visit them."

Despite being a retired professor, Wilcoxon said he is not worried about losing his job.

"The department head could discontinue my job at any time, but I am in a rather good position," he said. "Ancient historians are hard to come by, and they demand a lot of money. Basically, I am saving the department $65,000 a year on a new professor."

Because he has been a part of K-State for 50 years, Wilcoxon has been an eye witness to many changes.

"When I came here, the student population was 6,000-7,000 students," he said.

"The number of students has grown tremendously, and their attitudes have also changed."

Wilcoxon's first experience at K-State, following the end of World War II, almost led him to give up teaching.

"The first few years were pretty hard," he said.

"I taught mostly GIs that had just returned from

PRESIDENT CLINTON ENJOYS 20-POINT LEAD IN NATIONAL POLLS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six months before Election Day, President Clinton enjoys a commanding lead over Bob Dole, benefiting from a giant advantage among women voters and persistent doubts about the Republican congressional agenda.

The Democratic incumbent's big lead — roughly 20 points in recent national polls — would translate into an electoral landslide if the election were today. And it comes despite continuing voter doubts about Clinton's honesty and convictions and overwhelming sentiment that the nation is on the wrong track.

Given the volatility of Clinton's own standing in public opinion polls and the dramatic swing in voter sentiment between the 1992 and 1994 elections, there is no guarantee that the factors helping Clinton now will extend into the fall campaign.

George Bush, for example, led Clinton in polls taken at this point in the 1992 race. But Clinton's margin is more than twice as large as what Bush enjoyed four years ago and compares favorably to the cushion Ronald Reagan carried into his 1984 reelection campaign.

"The president enters the campaign looking awfully strong," Democratic pollster Peter Hart said. "But the difficulties that Bill Clinton had at the end of 1994 have not all been erased. It is my contention that Dole will be back in the game."

UNITED PARCEL SERVICE DONATES $3.5 MILLION TO CANDIDATES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The elegant town house in a historic block near the Capitol is a busy place this election year. A couple of times a week, lawmakers stroll over from their offices at breakfast, lunch or cocktail hour to meet with lobbyists.

The host is United Parcel Service, whose political action committee doled out $3.5 million to federal candidates over the past three years — more than any other special interest PAC.

The company multiplies its clout by maintaining the private town house to be host to fund-raisers and have quiet talks with those it is seeking to influence.

With the conversation comes a check for as much as $4,500.

"It's our way to have a more personal chance to spend time with the member," UPS spokeswoman Gina Ellrich said. "It allows a chance to talk about our business with a member and for them to get a chance to understand it in a different setting. It's convenient."

The gray-brick, two-story town house, on a shaded street just three blocks from the Capitol, has a brass porch lantern next to its natural oak front door. Pots of geraniums decorate the black wrought-iron front porch.

While it is not talked about openly, at least a dozen companies or lobbyists maintain similar facilities on Capitol Hill where they can huddle with legislators and raise money for them.

The others include Beneficial Finance; the lobbying and law firm of Williams & Jensen; sporting goods manufacturer Nike; lobbyist Tommy Boggs and the state of Florida.

MICROWAVES CAN BE USED TO TREAT ENLARGED PROSTATE GLANDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of men who suffer enlarged prostates now can choose a one-hour treatment instead of drugs or surgery: a machine that literally microwaves the prostate to relieve urinary symptoms.

The Food and Drug Administration approved the Prostatron, which kills excess prostate tissue by heating the gland with microwaves, based on studies showing it may help 75 percent of patients.

"While not a cure, it effectively treats the symptoms" of enlarged prostates, FDA Commissioner David Kessler said Monday.

The Prostatron is a one-hour, outpatient procedure that appears to work better than drugs and clearly is safer than surgery, said Dr. John Lynch, urology chief at Georgetown University Medical Center.

"It's not 100 percent" effective, Lynch said, but "it is going to appeal to a broad spectrum of men ... who have troublesome symptoms of this disease."

The prostate is a walnut-sized gland that surrounds the urethra, which carries urine to the penis. Prostates enlarge as men age, squeezing the urethra and making it difficult to urinate. More than half of all men over age 60 have the problem, called benign prostatic hyperplasia, or BPH — and 80 percent of men get it by age 80.

Surgery to trim the prostate is the most common and most effective treatment. But the $8,000 to $12,000 operation usually requires up to three days in the hospital and can cause such complications as impotence or incontinence.

There are two drugs approved to shrink the prostate or relax its hold, but they offer only modest relief and cost hundreds of dollars a year.

WICHITA AREA EXPERIENCES WINDIEST APRIL IN 22 YEARS

WICHITA (AP) — It was the windiest April in 22 years last month in the Wichita area, and things have not changed much so far this month.

Over four days in April, the wind blew almost constantly at speeds greater than 20 mph.

The average wind speed for the month of April was 15.4 mph, just slightly less than the monthly average of 15.8 mph in 1974, weather officials said.

It is the days in a row of near-constant high winds that have struck most people as unusual this year. It hasn't blown like that for a long, long time — maybe never — said Mary Knapp, climatologist with the K-State Weather Data Library in Manhattan.

"There are indications that the winds were constant like that back in 1935," Knapp said. Dodge City that year had an April mean wind speed of 16.2 mph, but a maximum gust for the month of only 38 mph.

Kappa Phi and Christ

■ Club provides deeper understanding of God

Nikki Prentice
staff reporter

The club president lit the candle, signifying the beginning of the meeting.

She then addressed the group standing before her, keeping her fellow sisters far and near in mind.

As the opening of the meeting proceeded, the rest of her sisters repeated the goals and purposes of the Kappa Phi Club of the Iota chapter women's sorority.

Kappa Phi is a national Christ-centered organization for university women. It is not a registered club at K-State, but it is under the umbrella of the University Parish of United Methodists, Mary Jane Adams, Kappa Phi support person, said.

Kappa Phi isn't an average campus sorority.

Karen Currey, Kappa Phi sponsor, said many people misinterpret Kappa Phi.

"We aren't a social sorority. A lot of people mistake us for it because of our name and lettering. We are a club," Currey, program coordinator for the Division of Biology, said.

The sorority's purpose is to provide college women with a deeper understanding of God, others and themselves.

It also provides a supportive environment and gives members the opportunity to be a positive, active member in church and the community.

Carrie Clark, junior in English education, joined Kappa Phi her freshman year. She said she wanted to meet people and be a part of a group with Christianity in common.

"I wanted to be involved in something with church. The group was special because it was all women and it could be more personal that way," Clark, Kappa Phi vice president of pledging, said.

MEETING INFO

► For more information on Kappa Phi and remaining meetings, contact the First United Methodist Church at 776-8821 or Rev. Cindy Meyer at 776-9278.

The group meets at 7 p.m. Sundays at the First United Methodist Church at 6th Street and Poyntz Avenue.

The group was founded by a Methodist preacher's wife in 1916 at the University of Kansas.

The idea behind starting the club was to provide more than just Sunday school for college women. When the organization began, it was strictly a Methodist club but transformed to non-denominational in the 1960s.

K-State's chapter was established in 1921. The sorority died in the mid-80s but was reactivated in 1993 by Adams and the Rev. Cindy Meyer, director of the United Methodist University Parish.

Any Christian woman enrolled at K-State is welcome to join Kappa Phi.

"We don't care what race or age. We accept any woman. We do a lot of programs that help us learn about each other and Christ. Since we all have different beliefs, it's nice to hear what someone else thinks," Shawna Cranwell, junior in medical technology and life science, said.

Worship, study, fellowship and service are Kappa Phi's program areas. The group provides community services within the area and helps with projects in conjunction with local churches.

The group painted the Ogden Friendship House, a United Methodist missionary house, late last month for the spring 1996 semester service project. Kappa Phi also contributed to the United Methodist church conference project, Round-Up for Hunger, last fall.

All United Methodist churches in the United States participate in the event to collect food and clothing for the less fortunate, Adams said.

All women in Kappa Phi experience three degrees of membership, Degree of the Pine, Degree of the Light and Degree of the Rose.

The Degree of the Pine marks the beginning of the pledge period. Degree of the Light is the actual initiation into the sorority, and the Degree of the Rose is for graduating members.

Most Kappa Phi chapters are in the eastern half of the United States. There are 23 active chapters with the possibility of three new chapters forming this spring.

"The chapters here in Kansas and Oklahoma have really been growing in the past five years," Adams said. "Most of the chapters were in Ohio and Pennsylvania."

K-State has 12 active members and two pledges this semester. There are no specific requirements for Kappa Phi. Each member pays a semester due of $12.50 to cover national expenses, tithe and local chapter funds.

Although the group only has two meetings left, interested women are encouraged to attend. Pledging activities will not take place until next semester, but it is a good way to find out what the group is like, Adams said. The most rewarding aspect of Kappa Phi for Trisha Kane, senior in psychology, is the friendship of the group.

"It's great because it doesn't end after college. We will always be bonded through Kappa Phi," Kane said. "I'll always be able to talk to these people and have them as lifelong friends."

Now the president blows out the candle signifying another week of work done, and the members of Kappa Phi leave, one another, but not before pledging love and loyalty to all sisters of Kappa Phi.

Students get extensive education for free

QUICKread

► Professor emeritus, who educates K-State history students for free, should be praised and thanked.

K-State students have a regular hero in their midst — and it is likely most don't even realize it.

George Wilcoxon, professor emeritus of history, brings to K-State his knowledge about the worlds of ancient Greece and Rome — his specialties.

But that is not what elevates Wilcoxon to a heroic status. It is the fact that he educates without pay.

Wilcoxon is an educator. An educator is most often defined as a person who teaches, whether the subject be ancient Greek history, Calculus III or biochemistry.

In Wilcoxon's case, his subject is life.

Since his retirement in 1984, this educator has shown K-Staters that there is more to life than money.

He has demonstrated that giving of one's self is one attribute about a person that should be celebrated.

K-State should celebrate Wilcoxon's dedication to his students, faculty and future. Because he feels he has more to offer the world than living off retirement checks, Wilcoxon returns to Eisenhower every fall to enlighten students about the fascinating glories and trials of the ancient world.

Wilcoxon shares his extensive knowledge with Wildcats free of charge, saving the University upwards of $65,000 a year. That money is used elsewhere. What do K-State students get in return? A quality education from a quality educator.

K-State should thank Wilcoxon for giving of himself. Hopefully there are more professors out there who will willingly forgo retirement to do what they do best — educate.

Hollywood twister rips small town

Myview

Russell Fortmeyer

The adrenaline rush one must get while escaping the terrors of a tornado are surely experiences one can never forget.

The rain stops. The wind dies. An unsettling air of calm settles over the neighborhood.

Is this the sign of another athletic department scandal or the advent of severe weather season in Kansas?

This weekend, the movie "Twister" premieres in theaters across America (hopelessly in Manhattan). Although it was filmed in Oklahoma, I think we can deem Oklahoma close enough to consider it part of our collective consciousness.

"Twister," written by technology-aroused, what-if author Michael Crichton ("Jurassic Park") and directed by Jan De Bont ("Speed"), is a movie about a wretched tornado that just won't leave a poor town alone.

The movie stars the tornado (in a daring career move since joining the William Morris Agency), Helen Hunt (mildly interesting "Mad About You" star who reportedly got "bitchy" on the set) and Bill Paxton (supporting actor extraordinaire in "Apollo 13").

The actors are by far secondary to the tornado, but I dare say the tornado will prove secondary to the town: Wakita, Oklahoma. Wakita, or "Skeeterville" as the locals respectfully call it, is a smallish town, practically wasting away in the red countryside of Oklahoma.

It has a school, plenty of cemeteries, a general store where you can get keys made and an indoor pool where you can have great family reunions.

I should know. My mother's mother's father's family established roots in the area around the turn of the century and still reside in the general proximity of Wakita to this day. However, my painful and tortuous family history is outside the scope of this column.

The countryside is fairly nondescript. There are no rolling hills or vast lakes — only rough prairie and the occasional dry gulch which is hardly the place to hide from a twister (so convenient). Every third mile, you can usually count on finding the foundation and cellar to an old country schoolhouse.

My mother can tell me stories about hiding in these country cellars (mounds of dirt covering a concrete box with steps leading down to the floor) and holding the door shut while a cyclone howled above.

The adrenaline rush one must get while escaping the terrors of a tornado are surely experiences one can never forget. I've never witnessed a tornado, but I would guess in the back of every Kansan's mind there lurks the desire to actually see one.

So it is with trepidation I will see the movie "Twister."

First of all, the Hollywood crew that descended on Wakita rebuilt the main street in faux-conventional brick buildings and created a media sensation, leaving the town a complete mess. Instead of improving the town's living conditions, it leveled many old buildings and installed a promised park, albeit a poor one.

Now, I don't for one minute reckon a Hollywood film company should revitalize a dying town. It shouldn't demoralize it, either. How much can a desperate chamber of commerce allow to happen for the sake of publicity?

In 100 years, the buildings on main street will endure, while a 1996 summer blockbuster movie will melt into the video store aisles alongside other marginal movies.

Is the Midwest's lack of celebrity events cause for the rape of the land by Hollywood? Hey, "People" magazine sells big in this state.

This hits even closer to home, as the Tim Burton-directed movie "Attack From Mars" was filmed in Burns, just up the road from my hometown of El Dorado. Luckily for Burns, the only buildings leveled by Martians were built specifically for the movie.

What's next? Woody Allen begins production on "Annie Hall II: Neurosis on the Prairie" right here in Manhattan? I think this is getting off track.

Anyway, to top all of this twister-mania off, last week's Newsweek reported the Motion Picture Association recently leveled a PG-13 rating on "Twister" for its violent depiction of severe weather.

Oh, heavens! Bob Dole better take note: It turns out severe weather has been dementing the minds of our youth all along. Perhaps I shouldn't see this movie on the basis I might see some really mean thunderheads and one too many ferocious raindrops. Maybe I shouldn't see this movie on the basis it might make Oklahoma look better than Kansas.

Or maybe I should get down on my knees and thank the Lord above for giving us hungry cinemaphiles a reason to go to the movies. Maybe I'm the only one, but when "Barb Wire" is the biggest release of the week, I'd rather weekend in Wakita.

Video games provide skewed perception of real life, goals

Over spring break, my 12-year-old brother and I made a trip to the video store, where I rented a movie and he rented a baseball game for Sega. We went home and went our separate ways. After watching my movie, I went downstairs and found my brother still playing the game, so I asked him whether he was any good at it.

"I don't know," he said. "I haven't played yet."

He then explained to me he had spent the past two hours making trades in order to get all the good players on his chosen team. Evidently, it was a complicated business, yet it was entirely possible to construct a roster of All-Stars on one regular team.

In a way, it was kind of cool he could sit there and stack his team like that, but the whole thing still smacked of absurdity. For one thing, no real-life owner could possibly afford to pay the team that had been assembled. For another, what would it prove to trounce the Royals with a team of millionaires drawn from both the American and National leagues?

Boys will be boys, I guess. After all, my brother is only 12, and 12-year-old boys like to win. It's a good thing they grow out of it, though, because the world outside of Sega would really be a mess if winning were so important that people became manipulative in procuring the players they thought would help their team win. That would surely remove any honor from victory.

Now when I was my brother's age, there was no pregame tampering I could do to gain an advantage. My only means of getting really good at "Mike Tyson's Punchout" for Nintendo was to push the start button and play the game over and over again.

I practiced until my thumbs blistered — until I had discovered and exploited the weaknesses of King Hippo, Bald Bull and the rest of the chumps along the way to Tyson.

At last I earned "The Dream Fight," a bout with Iron Mike himself, and he pretty much beat the snot out of me. In fight after fight, the guy knocked me upside the head and down to the canvas. With more practice, I learned to block and dodge his punches, but the man always prevailed sooner or later. I never could beat Tyson at his own game, nor could I so much as land a single punch of my own.

It became frustrating. Sometimes my mom would hear the sharp clink of the Nintendo controller striking the television screen or the string of expletives escaping my mouth, and she would yell upstairs that I'd better straighten up if I wanted to keep playing that stupid game.

Stupid game? It was as if she didn't realize I was up there on the couch fending off blows from Mike Tyson. He's tough. If I were to construct a list of the greatest boxers of all time, he would definitely be up near the top, because he's just really good at boxing.

In retrospect, I can see "Mike Tyson's Punchout" became all too real to me. I wasted a lot of time playing and watching other people play something that really was just a stupid game.

I mean, it's not as if video games are actual, physical games with actual, physical people playing them. Those real games are important, especially when you get to the collegiate and professional levels. I'm thankful that those who participate as spectators, players and coaches do so with greater maturity and character than your average prepubescent.

► LIFE DEMANDS WOMEN TO PROTECT THEMSELVES FROM EVERYDAY PROBLEMS

Editor,

I wish to address the issue of women's rights. We as women on this campus have the right or privilege to be able to go anywhere without fear or protection. However, common sense tells us otherwise. Whether you are in Chicago or Manhattan, Kansas, the reality of everyday life demands that we look out for and protect ourselves.

Please don't get on an elevator with one or several men when you are unaccompanied by a friend. I personally would not get on an elevator with a member of the opposite sex whom I did not know personally and trust ... I wouldn't even get on the elevator with a group of gay men. It isn't safe or smart.

Furthermore, if you are visiting a friend — male or female — in a dorm or a fraternity house or at the library, please ask your friend to escort you out of the building and safely to your destination. Any man worth being with would never allow a female to leave his residence unaccompanied. We must defend our honor prior to incidents. Using good judgment is imperative to survival. Your life is worthy of respect from yourself before any others.

► KISSINGER'S THOUGHTS AND SPEECH MISSING HUMAN RIGHTS AND DECENCY

Editor,

Amid the applause for Henry Kissinger's visit and for his broad knowledge and experience, let us remember what his "Realpolitik" means. It means human rights don't matter.

Granted, he might argue that "Realpolitik" helps create stability in the world and that helps human rights in the long term. That's a convenient, but highly questionable, premise.

It is not consistent for Americans to be enraged by the Oklahoma City bombing and then applaud "Realpolitik." Our war against Saddam Hussein caused the deaths of tens of thousands of children. We've not yet even acknowledged what we've done to Iraq. It's too painful, and it messes with our self-image as good (certainly not terroristic) Americans.

If human rights, babies and basic human decency matter to us, let us choose between "Realpolitik" and policies that prioritize human life. We cannot have it both ways.

Students organize Internet service

Darren Whitley
staff reporter

Demand for a local Internet service provider in Junction City gave several K-State students a unique opportunity to help start a business.

To meet that demand, Patrick Hennessey, senior in electrical engineering, who had worked for the electrical engineering department as a system administrator before working at J. C. Onramp, had to change his focus.

Hennessey said teaching people how to access the Internet for the first time was much different from the problems graduate students had brought him while he was working at K-State.

"I really have both enjoyed and learned a lot from the job," Hennessey said.

Hennessey said he has learned the difference between K-State and J. C. Onramp is network access as opposed to telephone-line access to the Internet.

"I now know how that stuff works," Hennessey said.

A pager he wears symbolizes the responsibilities of J. C. Onramp.

"I became responsible for the system before I was just the administrator. I had a boss, and he took care of a lot of things," Hennessey said.

Matt Henley, junior in computer science and technical support, helps new customers get on-line and helps maintain service.

He said J. C. Onramp has given him a lot of experience.

"I get a lot more range in what I get to do, as opposed to picking something real specific like you would on campus," Henley said.

Henley said he has learned how to start a new business because J. C. Onramp has allowed him to be involved from the ground up. It has allowed him to cross over from a system administrator to personal help for customers.

Because he serves about 150 customers, there's no set amount of things he has to know. What Henley has to learn, he must do so quickly so he may pass it on to them, he said.

Responsible for much of the customer service J. C. Onramp performs, Michelle Munson, senior in electrical engineering, helps moderate a weekly user-group meeting. About 30 people make up the core group of Netizens, she said.

The meetings are J. C. Onramp's attempt to gain an Internet foothold by providing service to its customers who might otherwise use Internet access provided by phone companies.

"We are at the fulcrum of a teeter-totter, because on one hand we are growing very fast and yet we do not have enough resources to hire all of the people we need. Those of us who do work are doing it in addition to trying to go to school," Munson said.

Hennessey said, "It was a dream job as a student."

Because he could access J. C. Onramp with a phone line, Hennessey

Business puts Junction City on-line

Darren Whitley
staff reporter

Phone lines to J. C. Onramp have opened doors to the Internet for residents of Junction City.

J. C. Onramp, which provides Internet service, opened its modem lines in November with help from several K-State students.

Before J. C. Onramp, Lee Howe-Brede, speech teacher at Junction City High School, had costly phone bills from calling her children, who lived in England, Costa Rica, Florida and Texas.

"Our phone bill is the national debt because we have kids just about all over the world. And now they have e-mail," Howe-Brede said.

With a $300 phone bill of which two calls cost $75 at Christmas, Howe-Brede said her interest in using Internet was high because e-mail only costs her $25 each month.

If Howe-Brede were to talk to her children for 200 hours, which is her monthly allotment on Internet, she would have charges of $1,200 under MCI's 10-cents-a-minute plan.

"We are not going to talk to our kids 200 hours. We love our kids, but not that much," Howe-Brede said.

In addition to staying in touch with her children, Howe-Brede uses Internet to do research and retrieve information.

"It is like having your own K-State library in your home. You can research everywhere," she said.

She said that is what she likes about J. C. Onramp. It often helps find answers to customers' questions, Howe-Brede said.

"They will walk you through your problem. No other service gives you that," she said.

Kendall Schoenrock, 14, of Junction City, convinced his parents to buy Internet service from J. C. Onramp by showing them they could check their stock quotes every 15 minutes instead of waiting on the evening news.

He gave up gifts for Christmas and his birthday by pleading with his parents.

"It is my Christmas present. It is my birthday present. This is what I want," Schoenrock said he told them. Schoenrock said he sees the Internet in his future and has scheduled his classes in the fall around his interest in computers. He plans to take keyboarding, processing spreadsheet and programming.

Already, Schoenrock is taking German and using Internet Relay Chat to test his abilities, he said.

Internet users find it helps them pursue interests outside of cyberspace.

Bob Watchous, Junction City resident, owns a moving company and is interested in target shooting.

He said he has been able to find addresses for vendors of exotic gun barrels that he did not have before by using Internet. He also said he has found information about reloading for accuracy to make him more competitive.

Before he used J. C. Onramp, Watchous said he used CompuServe, but it was too slow.

"CompuServe is really limited now because of the long distance and high cost associated with it. Now, I do not mind popping over to someone's home page," he said.

Because J. C. Onramp is a local call, Watchous has increased his use of e-mail and has learned more, he said.

"I have learned to use more of the software I have got as far as the Internet applications. The exchange I had before, I had no clue how to set it up," Watchous said.

Watchous and other customers of J. C. Onramp attend weekly meetings where they can learn from one another about using the Internet.

Before he joined J. C. Onramp, Watchous said he hardly ever used e-mail. Now he uses it to seek out answers, he said.

SPANNING 1986- THE DECADE 1996

As the most winning coach in K-State baseball history, Coach Mike Clark looks forward to the challenge of the upcoming Big 12 era

story by John Berggren

If and when the K-State baseball team ever gets a baseball stadium, Coach Mike Clark's name should be considered heavily to grace the marquee.

Clark, in his 10th year at K-State, is the most winning all-time coach in Wildcat baseball history. Clark has 267 wins, hovering above the rest on the list. The next-most winning coach is Phil Wilson, who tallied 138 wins over five seasons before Clark took the helm at K-State in 1986.

"I feel like I have been blessed in the fact that it's not very often that a coach gets to stay in one institution for 10 years," Clark said. "Most K-Staters only stay here for three or four years, but I've been here for a decade now."

"I'm also proud of the fact that I have been able to put together a winning season for eight of the last 10 years. I think it shows a tradition building."

Yet as coach for the Wildcats, Clark's position is not nearly as glamorous as those on other college baseball teams in the country.

Along with coaching duties, Clark also assumes the positions of groundskeeper, administrative assistant, travel coordinator, promotions director and equipment manager, and the list goes on.

Clark takes an optimistic look when performing all of his duties.

"It's something that I have to do," Clark said. "We can't just sit there and feel sorry for ourselves.

"It has been a challenge to stay competitive for the last 10 years. It's going to be even more of a challenge to stay competitive moving into the Big 12, the best baseball conference in college."

"Whenever we've gone up against a team like Oklahoma or Oklahoma State and the big budgets that they have to work with and the best facilities in the Big 8, it's even sweeter to know that the kids have gone up against teams like those and beat them."

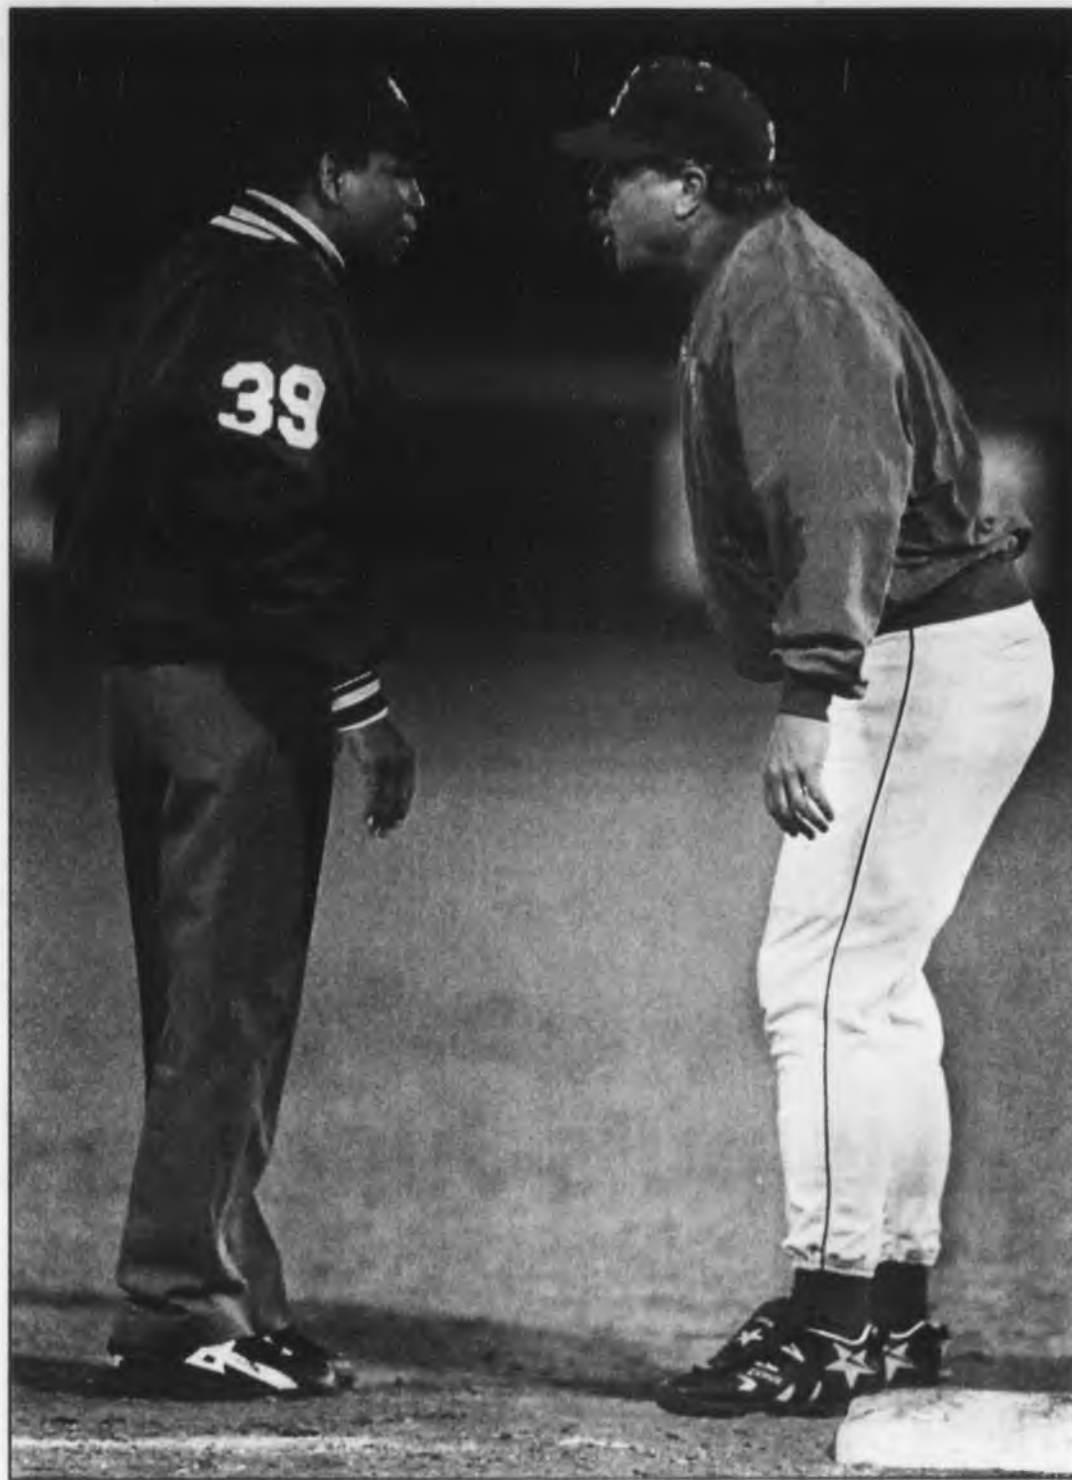

Maybe one of the most outstanding attributes to the K-State baseball program under Clark should be pinned to the character of his teams.

"I've never had one police officer call me in my 10 years of coaching," Clark said. "Eighty-five percent of all of our players graduate. I think it shows a lot about the kind of close-knit teams we have."

In this the last year of the Big 8, Clark said he was sorry to see it come to an end.

"It'll be sad to see the Big 8 go," Clark said. "It's a neat conference to play in, but we're moving on to bigger and better things."

"I'm looking forward to the challenge of coaching in the Big 12. My coaching styles won't change against the new teams. I believe in the Popeye theory that says that I am what I am and that's all that I am.

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark argues a third-base decision with an umpire during this year's game against Kansas in Manhattan.

"I coach players and not teams. As the kids keep getting better, you can point in the mirror and see that it translates to winning."

"For some teams, winning is everything. But here, I start with the individual. Don't get me wrong — nobody wants to win more than I do. When we hit a losing skid, it drives me crazy trying to figure out what we need to do."

In all of Clark's years, he noted two things that stick out in his mind as being most significant.

"Probably the neatest thing I have had the pleasure of watching was Craig Wilson in his senior year," Clark said. "He is the only K-State Big 8 Player of the Year, and he made the Olympic team. He was the only Olympian in the Big 8 conference that year."

"Also ranking right up with that was when we finished second in the Big 8 behind Oklahoma State in 1990. It came down to the last weekend of the season, and we were at Oklahoma State. We had to take two out of four from them to win the division, and we were on a big losing streak playing at Oklahoma State. We ended up taking one and losing three, but we finished second in the conference."

Agler leaves K-State for ABL position

■ Former women's basketball coach Brian Agler has accepted a coaching position with new women's basketball league

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

The rising popularity of women's college basketball has brought professional women's hoops back to the United States — and K-State will be a part of it.

Former Wildcat coach Brian Agler has been named coach and general manager of the American Basketball League's Columbus, Ohio, franchise.

The ABL will begin play in the fall.

Agler compiled a 38-39 record in 2-1/2 seasons, leading the Cats before resigning in the midst of an investigation into NCAA violations in February.

A native of Marion, Ohio, and all-American at Wittenberg University, the return to Columbus will be a homecoming of sorts for Agler.

"When I went in and expressed an interest in the league, the Columbus franchise was the one I was interested in," Agler said.

"I have family in Ohio and know a lot of people there, and I know Columbus and the central-Ohio area have really supported Ohio State women's basketball."

The ABL is not the first women's basketball league in the United States. But with women's Final Fours selling out in hours, the corporate world has expressed greater interest in the ABL than its predecessors.

That interest has led to the promise of higher salaries, luring the top American players back from the European leagues.

"With the corporate sponsorship that's been established and the TV package they will put together, there will be some of the more popular sports networks, and there are talks with the national networks about playoffs. With the NBA's interest in forming a summer league, we're going to be successful."

"Nine of the 11 Olympic players have already signed two-year contracts."

Columbus will compete in the Eastern Division against teams from Atlanta, Charlotte, Va., and Springfield, Mass. Western Division teams will be based in Denver, Seattle, Portland, Ore., and San Jose, Calif.

Because the league owns all eight teams, players will sign contracts with the league rather than individual teams. Sixteen players will be designated as franchise players and distributed in pairs to each team based on equality and regional interest.

Other interested players will be invited to a try-out in Atlanta in early June. Teams will draft players later that month.

Agler said former Wildcat Shanelle Stires, now playing professionally in Greece, stands a good chance to play in the ABL.

"She has the versatility, the attitude, and with her time in Greece, the professional experience teams are going to want," he said. "I know she works well in our system, and I would be glad to have her again."

Following the creation of the ABL, the NBA announced it would start a women's professional summer league beginning in 1997.

The summer league will utilize the NBA's established reputation and resources, including arenas and marketing resources, to promote the women's game.

Agler said he sees the summer league as a sign women's professional basketball is on the rise.

"I expect our league will see some sort of merger with the NBA in the near future, maybe two or three years," he said. "They want a women's league, and for that to be done right, it has to be during basketball season."

"With the considerable assets they bring to the table, there will probably be an expansion of the league about that time."

be one of the great teams in the league. The Supersonics are the Buffalo Bills of the NBA. They are masters at choking in the playoffs. If Mitch Richmond would have had any sort of a supporting cast, the Supersonics wouldn't have snuck by the Kings.

Seattle, like the Bills, will be classified as a good team but not a great team until it can progress in the playoffs.

I really don't expect that this year. Coach Karl still has to be kicking himself for not pulling the trigger on the Kemp-Pippen deal. Pippen would have escalated this Seattle team to the championship game for starters. But as it is, Seattle will watch the feeding of the lambs to the Bulls.

Last Sunday was a prime example of how pathetic sports TV on Sundays has become. What was on your local stations? Rowing! Yes, it was the old exciting matches between Oxford, Cambridge, Harvard and Yale. Do they have fantasy rowing leagues? Please, NFL football, get here soon. Save us!

Vaughn to stay at KU

Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Jacques Vaughn, befitting an honor student, quoted poetry to explain why he's passing up the NBA draft to stay at Kansas his senior year.

"I feel that God put me in a position when I came here to be a different and unique individual setting a standard," the point guard told a news conference Monday.

"As Robert Frost said, 'To take a path less traveled.' I think I'm doing that."

The Big 8 Player of the Year, Vaughn said he did not decide "100 percent" until Sunday night.

He'd been wrestling with the decision ever since Kansas lost to Syracuse in the finals of the Midwest Regional of the NCAA Tournament.

"It's been a long process for me," the 6-foot-1 California native said.

"I will not forgo my senior season. I will be back here to be the point guard for the university."

About 100 students in the back of the room, including most of Vaughn's teammates, broke into cheers. They, like everybody but Coach Roy Williams, had not been told beforehand.

"I really feel that I wanted to take a stand and be a different person," Vaughn said.

"And that's not looking down his nose or putting anybody else down who's decided to go to the NBA," added Williams, sitting at Vaughn's side.

Vaughn's staying makes certain the Jayhawks will be a Final Four favorite next year and possibly pre-season No. 1.

Every starter and all but one of the top reserves will be back from last year's 29-5 team.

"I think this is the most difficult path for him," said Williams, who said he was pleased by Vaughn's decision. "It would have been the easy thing to do to go to the NBA. It was guaranteed money. He was going to be a No. 1 draft choice."

"But by coming back, he's put himself in the position of having even more expectations and even more pressure than he would have had if he'd gone to the NBA."

Vaughn averaged a little better than 10 points last season and in three seasons has recorded 642 assists, No. 2 on the school career chart. In four NCAA games last March, he averaged 8.3 assists.

Sutton not having fun

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said Monday he doubted he would stay through 2002, the last year of his latest contract extension.

"I've had fun everywhere I've coached, but I've had a real honeymoon going back to Oklahoma State," Sutton, a 1958 Oklahoma State graduate, said. "The program was kind of down, and we've had great success."

Sutton took over at Oklahoma State in 1990 and coached the Cowboys to five-straight NCAA Tournament appearances. Last season, Oklahoma State finished 17-10 a year after advancing to the NCAA Final Four.

"You know, 17-10 is pretty good," Sutton said. "But after those seasons we've had, it's not as much fun as we're accustomed to."

Sutton and Creighton coach Dana

Altman also announced that the two schools will play a home-and-home series in the 1997-98 and 1998-99 seasons.

"We had tried to schedule Creighton University through the years, and it just never worked out," said Sutton, who coached at Creighton from 1969 through the 1973-74 season.

The 60-year-old Sutton, the only coach to lead four different teams to the NCAA Tournament (Creighton, Kentucky, Arkansas and Oklahoma State), said the new Big 12 Conference could be one of the nation's best in all sports.

"Some of my good friends in the Big 8 thought we were going slumping in basketball, but that's not true," Sutton said. "I told them I thought the University of Texas and Texas Tech could come in right now and play with us, and that was certainly proved this last year."

Juiced about Vaughn, KC Chiefs, the Wiz

Because this is my last column of the year, I thought I would provide you with some thoughts to ponder when trying to procrastinate studying for finals.

The Kansas City Chiefs are actually thinking about spending money on a free agent who isn't drawing retirement yet. This would be a first if they decided to sign free-agent tight end Johnny Mitchell. Mitchell wants $2 million a year and a $5-million signing bonus.

Carl Peterson, your first big and young free-agent signing shouldn't be Mitchell. Don't waste your money. He is a much over-rated tight end. Yes, he has great open field speed, but he is a poor blocker. You are not going to lose games because you have Keith Cash playing the position.

Monday, Kansas fans received news of one of the biggest decisions to hit college basketball. Jacques Vaughn announced that he would remain in school for his senior year and not come out early for the NBA draft. Good for you, Jacques. This is good from an academic standpoint and a financial standpoint.

Vaughn would not be the best point guard in the draft. Georgetown's Allen Iverson is obviously the best point guard coming out for the draft. Georgia Tech's Stephon Marbury is ahead of Vaughn too, as the second-best point guard.

The fact is Vaughn would have been lucky to be a top-10 pick in this year's draft. By waiting another year, Vaughn could be a top-three pick. The wait will be worth millions for Vaughn.

The most recent odds are out on the World Series. The Royals' odds are 75-1 on winning the World Series. The same odds are on for a Royal reaching the double-figures mark for home runs and a Rockies pitcher pitching a complete game.

Speaking of baseball — has the game become so boring we have to discuss whether a ball is "juiced" or not? Give me a break. Texas Rangers player Kevin Elster has hit seven dingers this year. This ties his entire total from 1991-1995. Maybe something else besides the ball is juiced?

The 122nd Kentucky Derby was this past weekend. Did anyone else besides me miss it? Is there anyone else besides me who doesn't care they missed it?

It will only be a matter of time before the Wiz and the Major League Soccer league folds. Soccer will always lag behind in fan support in America. Football, baseball, basketball and now hockey grabs the attention of fans. Soccer will not.

How many times do you hear in a store, "Hey did you see that exciting 1-0 soccer game the Wiz had?" Maybe if the MLS could find a way to "juice" the ball, then soccer could be on the rise.

The NBA playoffs are in full force. Once again the Seattle Supersonics are pretending to

► The Student Alumni Board is having a reception today to introduce graduating seniors to the KSU Alumni Association.

Mikki Tice
staff reporter

Attention, seniors: It's party time. The Student Alumni Board is putting on a reception to honor graduating seniors from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. today at the Brandberry Indoor Complex.

"The senior send-off has been developed as an annual event to introduce seniors to the KSU Alumni Association," Brad Beets, alumni vice president, said.

"We are welcoming the graduating seniors into the association and thought this would be a good event to let them know what the association has to offer."

Special discount Alumni Association memberships will be available along with door prizes. The first 200 seniors who arrive will receive T-shirts.

"This event is exciting because it finalizes graduation, and I think the Alumni Association is a good program," Jana Jones, senior in family studies and community services, said.

The Alumni Association has 30 in-state clubs and 32 out-of-state clubs.

"The association has clubs throughout the country where K-State alumni can get together and watch games or just hang out," Beets said. "Wherever one goes, they will find K-Staters, and that's a nice feeling."

The senior send-off isn't only for graduating seniors. Guests can come to the party for $5 and attend the baseball game free of charge after the event.

"I am excited to hear what the association has to offer, and I want a free T-shirt," Shawna Jordan, senior in sports medicine, said.

"I think it would be neat if everyone attended the baseball game after the event to support the Cats. As a student, this might be the last sporting event we will ever attend again."

The Alumni Association will be providing beer, soft drinks and hors d'oeuvres for everyone who attends the event.

"This event should be a good time, but I am definitely looking forward to the free beer and food," Jones said.

Man spreads tuberculosis

Associated Press

EMPORIA — An Emporia man with tuberculosis was placed in a hospital under a jailer's watch after he was spotted not wearing his protective mask in a public place.

A police officer and a hospital employee saw My Van Vo, 30, at a hospital without his mask after he was diagnosed with the communicable form of the disease, a violation of state law.

He was taken into custody Friday at his home and was being held at Newman Hospital on Monday.

"He was told to wear a mask, and he was without one, so he could be endangering the lives of others," said Sherry Smiley of the Lyon County Health Department.

Tammy Black, hospital supervisor, said Vo was ordered Monday to be held at the hospital through his treatment, which could last two to three weeks. During a pretrial hearing Monday at the hospital, Vo said he could not be responsible for his own treatment, Black said.

Black said officials were testing people with whom Vo had contact. Black said a 2-year-old boy who was in Vo's care tested positive for the disease. A 6-year-old boy also tested positive.

Tuberculosis is spread by coughing and sneezing and can be fatal. Most cases, however, are noncommunicable.

Bernard Franklin talks about his years at K-State.

Kansas State Collegian

Vol. 81 Kansas State University, Manhattan, Kansas, Thursday, February 13, 1975 No. 99

BERNARD FRANKLIN
... Student Body
President.

Franklin write-ins win

Bernard Franklin did the write-in with 562 (16 per cent) of the vote. "I know a lot of students that have Economics," Marilyn

Franklin returns to KSU as Assistant Dean

A former student body president who went on to serve as the youngest appointee to the Kansas Board of Regents has returned to K-State as assistant dean of student life.

Bernard Franklin '76 will develop a comprehensive leadership development program and will assist with recruitment and retention programs for prospective and current students. For the past year he has been director of student activities and organizations for Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla.

He was the first student body president to win an election on a write-in campaign and was the first black student body president. Franklin also served as president of three other student organizations: Black Key student honorary, the Black Student Union and the K-State Union corporation. He served from 1976 to 1981 as a member of the Kansas Board of Regents. Appointed at the age of 24, he was the youngest person ever appointed to the board.

"To say I'm thrilled at the opportunity to enhance undergraduate life at the university that so influenced me is an understatement," Franklin said. "The professional I've become today is in large part due to the tremendous opportunities afforded me as an undergraduate."

"I believe the greatest challenge facing higher education today is to develop programs, services, activities and curriculums which will prepare students to live in an increasingly complex and changing world," he said. "Leaders with sound moral and ethical development, who understand and are committed to diversity and multicultural issues, who can adapt to life in the midst of the greatest technological revolution man has ever known are in great demand."

Franklin has made Collegian headlines before. In 1975, he became the first black student body president and the first write-in candidate to win the office of student body president. In 1991, he returned to K-State as the assistant dean of student life after serving as the youngest person ever appointed to the Kansas Board of Regents.

Farewell to Franklin

Bernard Franklin prepares to move on from K-State story by Courtney Marshall

photos by Cary Conover

Some people have a lasting effect on others.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, is one of those people. He will be leaving K-State at the end of June.

Franklin has accepted the position of vice president and national director of the National Center for Fathering located in Overland Park.

"The vice president's role is one of directing the center's effort to reach men of color and men of the inner city by helping them become better fathers, understanding the role of fatherlessness and inner-city's impact on crime, poverty and how that segment of our society can be impacted," Franklin said.

He will be taking on a dual role as both the director and vice president.

"The National Director part is to be one of the spokespersons for the center," he said.

Whenever news media are looking for information pertaining to inner-city males or men of color, Franklin will be taking on that responsibility.

The center was started by Ken Canfield in Manhattan about five years ago and then moved to the Kansas City area two years ago. Canfield is the president of the center and finally influenced Franklin to become a part of the effort to influence male leadership. Franklin and Canfield met in a statistics course while they both were working on their doctoral degrees.

"He (Canfield) just latched on. It took a while for me to come around but we got it together," Franklin said.

Franklin has been at K-State for the past five years. He decided he wanted something more from himself and wanted to focus more on his passion for men's issues.

"I think there comes a time in your life, and maybe it's midlife, and you say, 'How do you want to spend the rest of your life? What are you doing now that's impactful, and is it personally satisfying?'"

Franklin said he is challenged by his current position. However, he wants to pursue helping men and does not feel he can do so at the same level by staying at K-State.

"The biggest thing is I have a passion for is men's issues, and I feel like our world and our society has in some ways covered to the proposition of wanting to help men."

Franklin has worked with several administrators and students closely over the years.

The Fortmeyer Files

by Russell Fortmeyer

This week

Russell Fortmeyer

junior in architectural engineering

Russell: Do you, Russell, consider yourself a little self-absorbed to be writing this yourself about yourself? Does anyone really care?

Russell: Are you talking to me? You talking to me? I don't see anyone else here.

You know, if I were asking those kinds of questions of other people, I think I would be looking in the mirror asking myself some really hard questions.

Do I think people care about this column? Well, I'm not so sure. I've only received 23 death threats — which is way below my usual semester level. Of course, most of those letters were written in squirrel blood.

Russell: Of those you interviewed, who was the most memorable?

Russell: That's a hard one to answer.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER/Collegian

I think most of them have been so varied and incomparable. I've tried to find interesting people who have some sort of bearing on others' lives, such as political leaders, ambitious students and former guests of Ricki Lake.

My most inspiring interview goes hands-down to his holiness, Pope John Paul II. Getting him on record saying he thought Princess Di had "gained a few pounds" was a spiritually uplifting moment.

The most outrageous interview was when I sat in with Bob Dole while he watched "Showgirls."

We giggled; we ate popcorn; we read "Cosmo;" we drank beers. By the end of the movie, Bobby and I had hooted and hollered so much we had to ask Liddy to run to the store and buy some Snuggles.

My interview with President Jon Wefald turned out to be my most controversial because I got him on record discussing "squirrelgate." The actual scandal lasted about 2-1/2 minutes, but the reverberations in the wildlife community still haunt us.

Russell: Is that where all this squirrel business came from?

Russell: A friend had told me he heard facilities was trapping and removing squirrels from near Wefald's home. Being somewhat outraged at human tampering of nature, I wanted to get to the bottom of it.

So, in that sense, it was a real question. However, it became this sick running joke with each interview. Sue Peterson practically begged to get to the squirrel question.

You know, I don't care if squirrels are swimming with disease, they deserve to live with dignity.

Russell: If you could be a tree, what kind would it be?

Russell: One of those plastic ones in the McDonald's playland. They are so happy all of the time. Besides, you ever see a tree that's toxic?

Russell: You've been called many things during your career, but if you had to choose, which would suit you the most: "Hey, you, punk kid! Get your ass over here!" or "Mack Daddy, leader of the flygirls?"

Russell: I don't think I would do my flygirls justice if I dignified that question with an answer.

Russell: Isn't it true you originated the role of Punky Brewster on TV's "The Punky Brewster Show"?

Russell: The role was originally written for a sassy-mouthed 13-year-old.

It's true! I portrayed Punky in the pilot, but I just couldn't compete with Soleil Moonfrye's masterful skill.

I still worship her.

Russell: Do you enjoy writing for the Collegian?

Russell: Of course I do. I especially love my editors — what a delightful bunch.

Technically, I think the content has improved tenfold since we began letting Ted Kennedy directly edit stories. He has brought a new conservatism to the paper, which is refreshing.

Now, he's no Tina Brown, but then again, I'm not suggesting Senator Kennedy wear heels.

Russell: Is everyone at the Collegian as conservative as Ted Kennedy?

Russell: I think most of us politically lie somewhere between Pat Schroeder and Harvey Fierstein.

However, I know some staff members are so conservative they actually voted for Clinton. That really surprised me.

You would think most of the staff would be pretty conservative, coming from Kansas. But it is a little-known fact most of us hail from Montana.

Russell: What is your fondest memory of this past semester?

Russell: Definitely the time I spent working in a chocolate factory, and my supervisor kept speeding up the conveyor belt, and more and more little chocolates rolled out, and I had to start stuffing them down my shirt and in my hat and in my mouth.

But I had to keep the job because I stole $100 from Ricky so I could audition for the Bob Cummings Show.

Russell: You were recently awarded a Truman Scholarship. How do you plan to use it?

Russell: Although I was quite pleased, I ultimately turned it down because of the U.S. government's inaction in replacing the Dalai Lama as the spiritual leader of Tibet. You know, the Dalai Lama remains in exile as we speak.

Russell: What about your recent divorce from your 25-year-old marriage to Jean Kirkpatrick?

Russell: You know, Jean was a real hoot, but her obsession with squirrels began to invade our time.

There was no Jean-and-Russell, it was just, "Hi, honey, did you read the op-ed piece in the Times about squirrels?" This is just all-too painful.

BLOODLINES

Another school year is over. Where does the time go? This week I'll try and help everyone plan their summer vacations using the Internet for help.

1996 Olympic Games Home Page

(<http://www.atlanta.olympic.org/>)
The big event in America this summer is the 1996 Olympics. With the event mere months away, Olympic fever is catching on. IBM won the bid to write the web version, and it is very impressive.

The best part is the section about the 15,000-mile journey the torch is taking to get to Atlanta. It not only gives the current position of the torch each day, but it also has a picture of the torch each day and complete biographies of torchbearers. Today, for example, the torch is between Olympia, Wash., and Seattle.

The news section will satisfy every hard-core Olympic junkie. Not only can surfers browse the articles, but they can join the Olympic listserve and have information waiting for them in their mailbox.

Of course, on-line ordering for tickets is available here as extras are put on sale. The Official Product Catalog for the 1996 Olympic games is also online. Unfortunately, on-line ordering is not available. Users will have to talk to a human to get that T-shirt or brick.

Igloo Report: Unofficial Penguins

(<http://www.contrib.andrew.cmu.edu/usr/gp2/f/igloo.html>)
If you're like me, you plan on spending your summer vacation watching the Pittsburgh Penguins win the Stanley Cup again. The Penguin faithful should flock to see the best fan page there is.

The Igloo Report gives summaries of all of the Pens' games — win, lose or tie. I prefer this page to ESPN's because here you get it from a real fan's perspective. Bad officiating is complained about, and nobody can rip a team like a true fan after a lackluster performance.

All of the player stats are kept here for convenience even when Mario is scoring goal after goal.

It also includes links to ordering tickets and other Penguins pages. There are also several graphics here to download.

Surfers can learn the phrases the best play-by-play man in hockey announcers, Mike Lange, uses to keep fans in awe. I also like taking a trip down memory lane by visiting the Igloo Report Hall of Fame. Here they have past Penguin greats such as Paul Coffey, Scotty Bowman and "Badger" Bob Johnson.

So you better buy Sam a drink and his dog one, too.

Cyberspace World Railroad Home Page

(<http://www.mcs.com/~dsdwdwy/cyberoad.html>)
For everything you ever wanted to know about trains and were afraid to ask, this is the place to go. This site will go as far as mirroring the Amtrak Site to have the most there is about railroads online. It is also host to the Canadian Railway Passenger Pages to help vacationers plan trips north of the border.

It links train animations, as well as showing the National Railway Historical Society "Unofficial" Pages.

It has a section for personal railroading stories from passengers recounting their voyage. Want a list of railroad documentaries on television? It has it, as well as a complete railroad library, covering everything from engineering to government regulations.

The graphics are good but not too large to cause problems while trying to view them through a modem. This is just a very good page.

Look for web site reviews next year.

Any questions or comments should be sent to (wings@ksu.ksu.edu).

Wildfire burns 7,500 acres in New Mexico

QUICKREAD

► Fire forces 1,000 people from village where it burned 27 buildings, including six homes. The fire still rages despite efforts to contain it.

Associated Press

QUESTA, N.M. — Firefighters fought on land and by air Monday to thwart a fast-moving wildfire that burned 7,500 acres, destroyed more than two dozen buildings and forced 1,000 people to flee. Much of the damage struck a non-denominational spiritual community in La Lama, an unincorporated village of 75 about 20 miles north of Taos in northern New Mexico.

"It was horrific," said Leslie Maclean, coordinator for the Lama Foundation. "There were little bonfires everywhere.

The trees were blackened. A lot of trees had gone."

Gov. Gary Johnson has declared a state of emergency throughout fire-plagued New Mexico, where firefighters just finished containing the 16,683-acre Dome Fire outside Los Alamos National Laboratory last week.

"Any sort of activity that might start a fire has got to be stopped," Johnson said Monday.

On Sunday, the fire burned down 27 buildings in La Lama, including a half-dozen homes, authorities said.

The community had been evacuated before the fire struck. No injuries were reported, but 18 of the village's families lost their homes.

Maclean said most of the group had little or nothing left after the fire destroyed their mountain paradise.

"We're kind of alternating today between 'None of this matters' and 'Oh, my God, what happened to my Walkman?'" she said.

The fire also burned an unknown number of acres of the Carson National Forest, including in the Columbine-Hondo Wilderness Study Area, high alpine country that is very popular with hikers and horseback riders, Carson spokesman Gary Schiff said.

The blaze was ignited Sunday by a trash fire in San Cristobal, and raced northward to La Lama, forcing the evacuation of about 1,000 residents there and in the communities of Questa to the north and Red River to the northeast.

Firefighters began building fire lines in nearby canyons to prevent the blaze from spreading to Questa and Red River.

"The entire problem with this fire is a lack of access and extremely steep terrain," incident commander Larry Humphrey said.

"This isn't going to be a three-day fire," he said.

Ground crews were being helped by air tankers, which dropped water and fire retardant onto the flames.

The blaze first burned sagebrush of the rolling high desert country, then swept into pinon and juniper trees before flaring into rugged, steep mountains and canyons with tinder-dry ponderosa pine, spruce and fir trees.

"We're one of the forests that hardly ever burns, and when we burn it's heads up for everybody else," said George Davis, a Forest Service fire coordinator in Taos.

the war, and most of them had the feeling that the government owed them a degree since they fought for their country.

"In the classes, I would throw out questions for them to answer, but no one would raise their hands. And they all looked rather hostile.

"If the students wouldn't have changed, I probably would have quit teaching."

Student attitudes did not begin to change until the '50s and '60s, Wilcoxson said.

"Things didn't begin to change until the GIs were out of college," he said.

"During the 50s and 60s, teaching was more enjoyable. I had good students with better attitudes about learning.

"I have had good relations with the students ever since."

Having strong student relations has kept Wilcoxson in touch with many of his students.

"It is always something of a thrill when you get really good students, students that you think are going to go on and have really strong careers," he said.

"And then you find out that they do. It is a thrill to look back and feel I had a part in developing where they are today."

Despite a rocky start, Wilcoxson said he plans to remain at K-State as long as possible.

"I am still teaching and hope to continue for a long time."

with the body.

Colby's wife, Sally Shelton-Colby, identified the body, clad in khaki pants, a red windbreaker, a blue and white shirt and no shoes. She said her husband customarily kept the life jacket in the canoe but didn't wear it.

Experts had said that the buildup of decomposition gases in a body after death often brings a drowning victim's body to the surface after a few days. The colder the water, the longer the process takes.

Colby's body was believed to be in water 7 feet to 13 feet deep and at temperatures less than 60 degrees, so it was not considered unusual that it took nine days to surface.

"What happened today is, nature took its course," said Lt. Mark Sanders, an officer with the state Department of Natural Resources.

The search, which at one time included dogs, divers, sonar equipment and drag lines, had been scaled back in recent days.

"Judging by what we've seen he was alive when he went over and there was nothing like a heart attack," Sanders said.

"Bernard has obviously had an enormous impact on the entire university community. We are fortunate for him to have been a part of the K-State community for almost five years," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

Franklin will be coming back to K-State on a volunteer basis to help with leadership conferences and recruiting in the Kansas City area, Bosco said.

A national search has already started for a replacement for Franklin. Bosco said he hopes to have a replacement before the fall semester begins.

Carla Jones and Susan Scott, assistant deans of student life, and Bosco will be covering the duties of Franklin until a replacement is found.

Franklin will be hard to replace, according to some of his associates and student leaders.

"Bernard has always been there when I had some sort of school problem or personal situation arise. He has always been there to encourage me and support me in my efforts both on a personal level and as a student leader," Becca Korphage, senior in political science, said.

"He has helped me develop my leadership skills and has been a great example of a strong leader. He is a great mentor and friend," she said.

Scott first knew Franklin when he served as the youngest person ever appointed to the Kansas State Board of Regents at 24.

"His capacity to speak and move people is amazing. He can change people's minds with one speech where most people would need a class or months of therapy," Scott said.

"As a colleague, he is the most supportive person I have ever worked with. He has lived a life that is inclusive and has made an impact on many people's lives," she said.

Franklin started earning a reputation well before he started working with students at K-State.

As a K-State alumnus, Franklin graduated in 1976 and left a mark that has yet to be surpassed. He was the president of several organizations on campus.

He was the first black student to ever be elected to student body president and has been the only one since. Franklin also was the first student to win the election as a write-in candidate and the first candidate to win the election with 55 percent of the votes. The election had the largest voter turnout ever recorded.

CRIME

Former teacher convicted of attempted molestation

Associated Press

DOVER, N.H. — A former English teacher at exclusive Phillips Academy was convicted Monday of trying to molest a 12-year-old boy and possessing and exhibiting hundreds of cut-and-paste child-porn photos.

A jury deliberated 9 1/2 hours over two days before convicting 59-year-old David Cobb, who was fired by the prep school in Andover, Mass., after his arrest last summer.

Cobb had no comment as he left the courtroom. His lawyer said he will appeal.

Judge Joseph Nadeau revoked Cobb's bail and set sentencing for June 12. The prosecutor asked for a psychological evaluation to support his request for longer-than-usual sentences. Cobb could be sentenced to hundreds of years in prison.

Cobb was arrested Aug. 22 in Farmington walking with a 12-year-old boy. Police say he offered the boy $20, purportedly to help some retarded children at his camp change out of their sandy bathing suits. Cobb later acknowledged there was no such camp. He was convicted of attempted sexual assault.

When Cobb approached the boy, he had a knapsack containing a pumpkin mask, a pay list for favors, children's underwear, a Polaroid camera and hundreds of what he told police were his "fantasy photos of his naked camp."

Cobb was convicted of 321 child pornography charges based on the photos he made by cutting pictures out of pornographic magazines and superimposing children's faces from clothing catalogs.

Of the 321 charges, 53 were felonies for showing dozens of the pictures to a 13-year-old boy about a week before his arrest. The rest were misdemeanor possession counts.

Prosecutors have said there is no evidence of any misconduct by Cobb involving students at Andover, where he taught for 27 years.

The prosecutor in New Hampshire, County Attorney Lincoln Soldati, said he will seek an extended sentence. "As a parent, I don't know what greater nightmare a parent could have than a stranger approaching your children," he said.

Each of the felony charges normally carries a sentence of 3 1/2 to seven years. The misdemeanors are punishable by up to a year in prison. Soldati said he would instead seek 10- to 30-year sentences on the felonies and two-year terms on the misdemeanors.

Cobb's lawyer, Cathy Green, never denied he approached the boy in Farmington, nor that he had a knapsack full of photographs, underwear and the mask. The defense argued that the photographs weren't pornographic and that Cobb had no intention of assaulting the boy.

But Soldati cited the list titled "Pay Scale for Pumpkin" in arguing that Cobb meant to molest the boy. Among the acts on the list: "lotioning," an apparent reference to sexual massage; "assisting in urination"; and "allowing Pumpkin to lotion you" both with or without underwear. No evidence came out at the trial that any of the sex acts were performed.

At Phillips Academy, Cobb was a respected English teacher known for his clothes, ranging from designer suits to motorcycle leathers, and his black BMW motorcycle. A 1994 GQ magazine profile called him "the Natty Professor."

Sometimes he appeared in class dressed as Jay Gatsby or other literary characters.

LEGISLATURE

Junction City schools face decrease in funds

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas' 304 local school districts will get an additional $32 million in base state aid for the 1996-97 school year, the result of a $22 per-student increase approved by the Legislature and enrollment changes.

The amounts vary widely, depending upon enrollment shifts, with Olathe Unified School District No. 233 gaining $5.3 million on the top end of the spectrum and Junction City USD 475 losing $1.43 million at the other end.

Olathe is projected to have an enrollment increase of 642 students next fall, a continuation of the southwest Johnson County growth, while Junction City is expected to lose 102 students, largely the result of the downsizing of Fort Riley.

Most of the new money goes to the bigger districts, because they have more students and it is distributed on a per-pupil basis.

Dale Dennis, the Department of Education's school finance expert, said figures in a new computer analysis of the effect of the school finance law passed last Thursday are based on the districts' own projections of fall 1996 enrollments and local option budgets currently in effect.

The Legislature provided in the 1992 school finance law that districts could spend more money than the state provided by adopting local option budgets — which required voter approval — of up to 25 percent of the amount they get from the state to fund their schools.

Some districts are expected to raise their local option budgets, and some may initiate them.

The new law, which Gov. Bill Graves has said he will sign, automatically continues LOBs that were in effect during the current school year for another year.

The base per-pupil state aid was increased to $3,648 from $3,626 under the bill.

Based on a projected statewide enrollment in kindergarten through 12th grade next September of 445,572 students — an increase of 2,933 — the state will spend $1.984 billion from its general fund next year for public education.

The local option budgets, of which the state pays part of the cost, will add about $5 million to the cost to the general fund, Dennis said, for a total increase next year to the state treasury of $37 million.

Total amount expected to be spent on public schools in Kansas next year is now set at $2.174 billion.

That will rise if local option budgets are increased.

did not have to leave home to do his work.

"I did 90 percent of my work, and I wasn't even in Junction City. It is really great because of the type of the work and the ability to get to the office at any time," Hennessey said.

"I could work when I wanted to," he said.

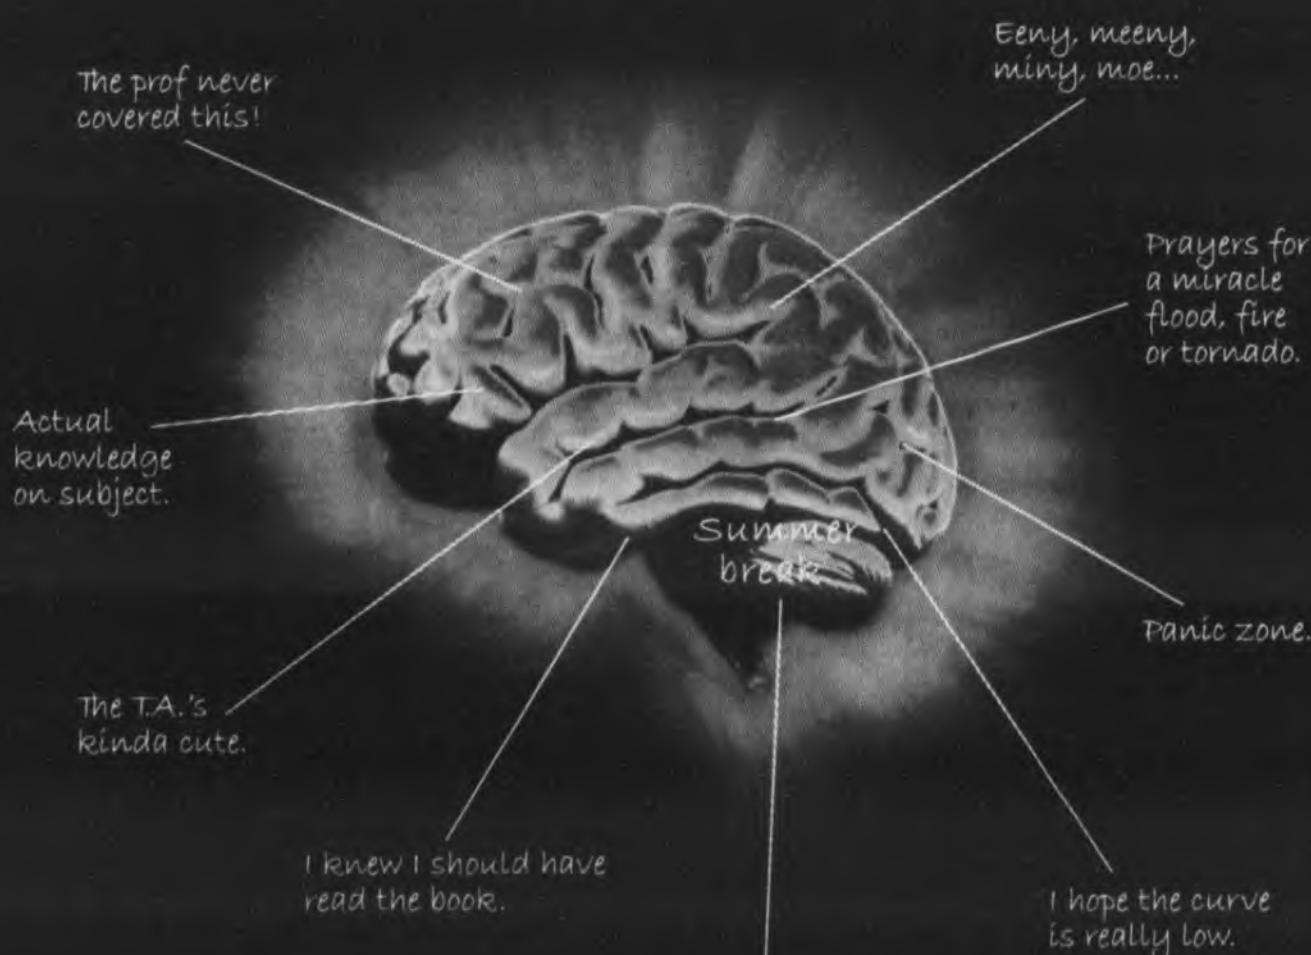

Hennessey, who has accepted a job in California, said he will keep working for J. C. Onramp because he will still be able to take care of things with a telephone call.

Deaths increase

■ 20-percent increase in Kansas highway fatalities raises questions

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Since Kansas and Missouri raised their speed limits, the number of traffic fatalities also has jumped in the two states.

Missouri recorded a 28-percent increase in traffic deaths in April compared with the same time last year, the Kansas City Star reported Tuesday. Kansas had a 20-percent increase, although that number is preliminary, said a state Department of Transportation spokesman.

Before the two states raised speed limits, accidents had been stable. Missouri saw exactly the same number of fatal accidents from January through March compared with the year before, while Kansas saw a 1-percent decrease.

There is no direct evidence blaming the rise in traffic fatalities on higher speeds.

"My gut feeling says that speed has something to do with it," said Lt. Ron Beck of the Missouri Highway Patrol. "Dropping the limits saves lives, and increasing it does the reverse."

Motorists seem to be driving faster both on highways and lesser roadways, police said. Drivers, having gone for miles at high speeds, may find it hard to slow down on highway offshoots and city streets, police said.

Peterson enters race for Kansas legislatureDan Lewerenz
contributing writer

Former Student Body President Jeff Peterson announced his candidacy for the 66th district legislative seat Tuesday, saying he wants jobs to be the top priority of his campaign.

"The No. 1 issue is economic growth and development, being for growth so we can offer higher-wage jobs," Peterson said. "So many people move to Manhattan and fall in love with this community. I have a lot of friends who came to Manhattan, and they want to stay, but they leave because they can't find the type of wage jobs they want."

"I think we can improve that by bringing in businesses, supporting programs like the highway (U.S. Highway 177) development, supporting programs like the construction bond issue that we have on campus, being for things."

Peterson will run as a Republican.

Charles Hostetler, chairman of the Riley County Republican Party, referred to Monday's Collegian to show why these issues are important.

"In this morning's Collegian, there's some good news and some bad news. The good news is Sheila Hochhauser is not sure she's going to run, and so we're hopeful she won't. Then she went on to say she thinks she will, and that's fine. That's our democratic system," Hostetler said.

"Then she also says she's going to run on her record, and I think that's extremely important because I think Tatsuo Tanaka, consul general of the Japanese Consulate in Kansas City, Mo., snips a symbolic ribbon outside the Language Learning Center as modern language students and faculty watch. The center opened today in Eisenhower Hall.

Language lab opens in Eisenhower

Richea Lecklider
staff reporter

What was once known as the modern language lab in Eisenhower Hall has been renovated and is named the Language Learning Center.

The official ceremony took place at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in Eisenhower 015 and then moved down the hall to the Language Learning Center, where the ribbon cutting took place.

Tatsuo Tanaka, consul general of the Japanese Consulate in Kansas City, Mo., who attended the ceremony along with his wife, had the honor of cutting the ribbon.

The Tanakas have provided much support to the development of Japanese language and culture at K-State. William Richter, assistant provost for international programs, said.

"We appreciate the role of the Consulate of Japan and University administrators in helping modern languages replace its old lab with a modern, multipurpose facility," said Bradley Shaw, associate professor in the Department of Modern Languages and project director for the grant matching.

The main purpose of the new learning center is to bring things up and to be more state of the art, Shaw said.

He said funds were allocated to upgrade the original facility in 1981 and again in 1988. The idea for the new center was first proposed in 1989.

A new proposal was made in 1995, and the Japan World Exposition Commemorative Fund gave a grant to the project totaling $67,243 in order to begin the project. The money from the fund, along with $80,000 of University funds, purchased equipment for the center.

The Language Learning Center features 25 student stations which contain Sony LLC 9000 Language Learning Systems.

The system has many features that can be added as funds become available and allows for quality sound for audio listening and recording and two video sources for VHS videotape or laser disc.

The system is controlled by an easy-to-use touch-screen console.

The center also has high-speed

Tri-Sigmas restructure to save chapter

■ Current members will be alumni as nationals tries to boost membership

Tara Roessler
staff reporter

A letter was sent to Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority telling the members that the house would not be open next fall and the current members were granted alumni status.

On May 3, the Collegian reported the Tri-Sigmas were not closing down that house. That is true. But as of next year, the house will be made up of completely new members.

The national organization had talked to the members about this last week when they came to look into financial and membership concerns.

Diana Sarber, national president of Tri-Sigma, said the decision was a mutual one reached between the national organization and the Delta Phi chapter here at K-State. The decision came because low numbers in the current house made it hard to compete on campus, Sarber said.

"It was kind of a mutual decision. The chapter was not at a competitive size. Although the women gave a strong effort, it was very hard to compete in rush," Sarber said.

Next fall, the Tri-Sigmas will participate in formal rush along with the other sororities but will also have what Sarber called a redevelopment rush about three weeks into the semester. The current members of the house will be granted alumni status next year, and a combination of two rush efforts will be used to bring in a strong number of new members.

"The national organization is planning a rush effort in the fall that will include a national team and a collegiate team to conduct rush," Sarber said.

In the two rush periods, Sarber said the Tri-Sigmas will be looking for all classifications of women — those going through formal rush and redevelopment rush, which will be open to all women.

"It will be a great opportunity for women on campus to be involved in leadership and the development of a new chapter," Sarber said.

The redevelopment rush will be done with the Panhellenic Council's support and through what Sarber called a media blitz. Flyers, radio, advertisements and any other media resource will be used to let students know about the second rush effort. It will be similar to formal rush but

The spirit of K-State will be part of the running of the U.S. Olympic torch.

Jennifer Bever, a K-State alumna, will carry the torch in the Minneapolis, Kan., area for one kilometer.

Bever got her bachelor's degree from K-State in 1992 and her master's degree in regional and community planning in 1995.

"A friend of mine entered a contest at the supermarket and nominated me to carry the torch," Bever said.

Bever said her friend knew she liked to run and entered her name.

"About two or three months later, my friend got a call saying I had won the contest," Bever said.

Bever will run with the Olympic torch for one kilometer, but she has not been told the exact route she will run.

"I won't know when I get to run until about two weeks before," Bever said.

Bever said because the paces of all the runners

A K-State architecture graduate has been hired to oversee $700 million worth of buildings for the 1996 Summer Olympics.

Cheryl McAfee, 1979 graduate in architecture, is the deputy director of the joint venture Programs Services Group overseeing 33 Olympic sports projects.

McAfee said she began this work in February 1992 after submitting a proposal and being selected for an interview.

The programming and hiring of design firms and construction companies began immediately, but they did not break ground for another year, McAfee said.

McAfee said they received a lot of criticism from the media due to the lack of activity but that people just do not understand the kind of work that must be done in preparation to construction.

Among McAfee's responsibilities is overseeing

► DEMOCRATS FAIL TO PREVENT REPUBLICAN PLAN FOR GAS TAX CUT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats are conceding they can't block an election-year push by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole and other Republicans to temporarily cut the federal gasoline tax.

"They're in the majority. They have the votes," Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said Monday.

Democrats are forgoing a fight even though many are criticizing the reduction, saying it could amount to a windfall for oil companies if they don't pass along the cut to consumers. And environmentalists maintain the tax cut would encourage more energy consumption and hurt the environment.

Republicans were hoping to unveil details of the bill today and, in the Senate, possibly vote on it. Dole, the presumptive GOP presidential nominee, said he would discuss the timing of the vote with Daschle, as well as the possibility of voting on the minimum-wage increase long sought by Democrats.

► PHONE BILLS MIGHT INCREASE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Telephone companies are proposing that the cost of the most basic level of local phone service be allowed to rise $10 a month during the next five years for most Americans, a coalition of consumer groups said.

In a filing to be made today to the Federal Communications Commission, the Consumer Federation of America and the American Association of Retired Persons projected the increase after examining 13 universal service filings nationwide. The proposals were submitted by seven regional Bell telephone companies, four long-distance companies, the United States Telephone Association and Pacific Telesis and Pacific Bell, which filed jointly.

The phone companies acknowledge the basic service rates would rise but contend that for most consumers the total bills would not go up. They contend that fees for other services, such as caller ID or call waiting, would go down.

► LOBBYISTS SCHMOOZE QUIETLY

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's not talked about openly, but at least a dozen special interests maintain getaways in the shadow of the Capitol where they can entertain and lobby members of Congress while raising thousands of dollars in campaign contributions for them.

Companies like United Parcel Service and prominent lobbyists like Tommy Boggs increase their clout by maintaining private townhouses where they can conveniently and discreetly host fundraisers and lobby lawmakers away from office distractions.

"It reinforces the fact that you're helping the incumbent, and other lobbyists come," said one well-known lobbyist, who discussed the subject only on condition of anonymity. "It increases the perception of being more of a player."

The list includes UPS, whose political action committee doled out $3.5 million to federal candidates over the past three years — more than any other. UPS hosts two or three events a week at its gray, two-story brick townhouse three blocks from the Capitol.

► BLAZE CROSSES NEW MEXICO

QUESTA, N.M. (AP) — Airplanes bombarded a raging wildfire with water and fire retardant, slowing the march of a blaze that headed toward a ski resort after charring at least 27 buildings and forcing hundreds of residents to flee.

The fire, which has burned across more than 7,500 acres of tinder-dry ponderosa pine in northern New Mexico's steep mountains and canyons, was also slowed Monday by light winds.

"In some areas it's kind of creeping," Carson National Forest spokesman Gary Schiff, said.

The fire was about seven miles southwest of Red River, which sits at the base of a ski area at an elevation of nearly 8,700 feet.

► ILLEGALS FAVOR CRAMPED CARS

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Pickup trucks, moving vans, even a portable toilet.

Of the innumerable ways illegal immigrants sneak into the United States from Mexico, the vehicle crammed with people seems to be the method of choice lately.

In four accidents in the last five weeks, 10 illegal immigrants were killed, and dozens were injured in car wrecks and chases on southern California roads and freeways.

The most recent came Sunday when a truck fleeing a state trooper and carrying up to 30 illegal immigrants flipped on its roof, spilling its human cargo onto the roadway.

► MILITIAS RAVAGE LIBERIAN CITY

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Young street fighters battled in Liberia's looted, torched capital.

Charles Taylor, head of one of the militia groups that have ravaged Monrovia in a month of bloodshed, called for a truce Monday, but his fighters still tightened their siege of a rival force's encampment. U.S. Marines fired on militiamen outside the American embassy in response to gunfire, U.S. military officials said. It was unclear whether the Liberians had aimed at the compound or at opponents outside.

Process delays diplomas

Marci McNeal
staff reporter

May graduates will have to wait until the middle or end of June to show off their new diplomas. The delay is not meant to torture graduates or make them think they did not graduate.

The diplomas go through a long process before they can be mailed out.

"The potential graduates send their graduation applications in during the fourth week of the semester, and they are checked by the school's dean," Donald Foster, University registrar, said.

Foster said the completed applications are then forwarded to the Office of the Registrar, where the students become candidates on the list to graduate.

"At the end of March, we order the diplomas, and we don't receive them until mid-April," Foster said.

Foster said once the diplomas arrive, they send them to the deans who still sign the diplomas.

"Most deans still sign the diplomas, but there are one or two deans that do not," Foster said.

Foster said the deans then send the signed diplomas back to the registrar's office, and they wait until after finals end to continue with the process.

"We then send grade cards to the academic dean's offices," Foster said. "They determine who graduates, and then they send the lists back to us."

Foster said it can take about two weeks before the deans can get the lists back to the registrar's office.

"Those who applied to graduate and didn't meet the requirements are taken off the list by the deans," Foster said.

Foster said the diplomas of the students who applied to graduate but did not meet the requirements are thrown away.

"This whole process of dealing with the diplomas takes about four months," Foster said. "We mail them out in mid-June between summer school fee-payment and freshman orientation."

Foster said those who will not receive diplomas are notified by their academic dean's office, and most people who apply for graduation do graduate.

ATOs award scholarship to senior

Jill Story

Oh, the places she's gone.

As a member of the Union Program Council's Outdoor Recreation Committee, Emily Brink has organized trips for K-State students from the Appalachian Mountains to Rocky Mountain National Park. On top of that, she has a full slate of other activities and a grade point average to die for.

Now, her contributions and accomplishments have paid off.

Brink, senior in pre-physical therapy and kinesiology, has been awarded the Stanley L. Winter Alpha Tau Omega K-State Union Leadership Scholarship. Brink said she will use the scholarship money to attend physical therapy school at Washington University in St. Louis this fall.

"We were really looking for the person who has not only done the most for the Union, but also for someone who had a lot of activities outside of Union Program Council and Union Governing Board. We chose the best overall person out of all those who were nominated," said Bill Muir, faculty sponsor of ATO and president of the K-State ATO Students' Aid Endowment Fund.

Potential recipients are nominated through letters of recommendation to a three-member committee, including Union Director Bernard Pitts, a designee from the Winter family and Muir.

The committee looks at potential, scholastic aptitude, exemplary fellowship, outstanding character and contributions to the quality of programs and activities of the K-State Student Union before awarding the scholarship, Muir said.

Forum a chance to air views on parking

QUICKread

► The Parking Services forum is at 3 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Big 8 Room. Go and make your views about parking known.

Whether you ride a bicycle, drive or walk to campus, there is a meeting you should attend today.

A Parking Services forum is at 3 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Big 8 room.

Historically, students have not attended forums unless the parking fee is going up. The good news is, the fee is not going up. For students, that is. Parking Services is talking about raising the fee for reserved stalls. This will hopefully decrease the demand for reserved stalls, which might lead to an increase in student stalls.

But faculty are sure to turn out in force to protest the rise, and students need to be there to offer an opposing viewpoint.

Bicycle regulations are also a topic students should bring up. Although not on the agenda for the forum, Parking Services is looking to create a bicycle safety committee. Students should question Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, about the creation of the committee, the people who will be on the committee, what rules they will create and how those rules will be enforced.

Students are the majority of bicycle riders on this campus, and should have a heavy say in the regulation of them.

Needless to say, students on this campus are apathetic. Fewer students turned out for the Student Governing Association general election than in the past four or five years. Even fewer students attend forums in the Union for any reason, much less one that hits as close to a nerve as parking.

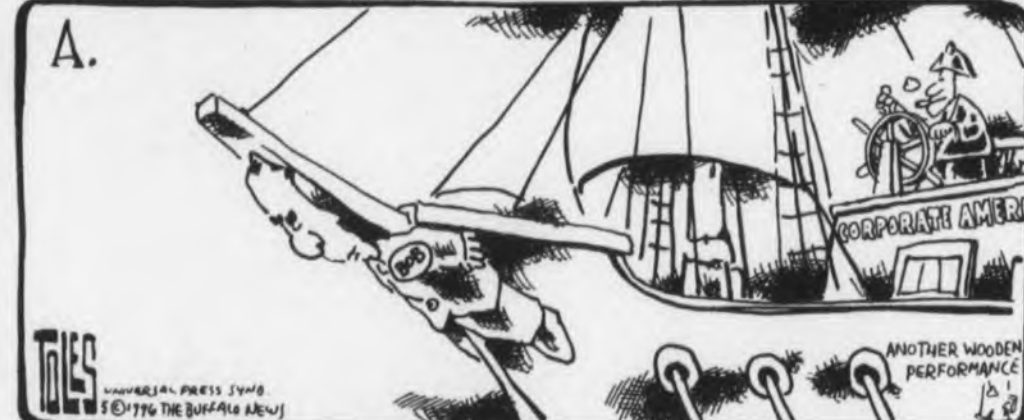

Break out of this cycle. Though finals are approaching, take a few minutes and go to the parking forum.

► KISSINGER MADE OUT TO BE HERO BY MANHATTAN MEDIA

Editor,

History major Rick Johnson should be commended, along with his teachers, for his knowledge and portrayal of Henry Kissinger during the Nixon Administration. His letter to the editor provided some balance to the real Kissinger who had been depicted in the Manhattan media as being on a pedestal.

TOM POWELL
"Kissinger and Nixon perpetuated the atrocities in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos and were then rewarded and credited for resolving the conflict."

Kissinger and Nixon perpetuated the atrocities in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos and were then rewarded and credited for resolving the conflict. It is kind of like the New Jersey police officer who lectured youngsters about the dangers of drugs and gangs while holding a second job of robbing banks and selling heroin.

I went into the service during the Vietnam era not because I wanted to, but because I had to. How could I refuse my country when they sent me such a nice letter that started out: GREETINGS! Perhaps my number was called so another person (who shall remain anonymous) could finish his education at Oxford, England, and smoke, but not inhale.

As I recall, official public statements during the '60s and '70s were that the United States was not involved in any activity in either Cambodia or Laos. I am confused. I wear an MIA bracelet with the name of a high school buddy (Charles Douglas King, USAF) who has been missing in action since Christmas Day 1968 — in Laos.

Now either Kissinger is wrong or official veterans records are wrong. I wonder if Kissinger would be willing to explain the discrepancy, first to Mr. and Mrs. King and then to the public.

While Kissinger is enjoying and celebrating Christmas every year, please excuse my friend's parents if they are not able to share in the festivities.

► WOMEN SHOULDN'T HAVE TO LIMIT ACTIVITIES FOR FEAR OF RAPE

Editor,

This letter is in response to Tina Horocofsky's request that women limit their everyday activities in order to "protect themselves," including avoiding elevators filled with men ("even gay men") and not walking to and from regular destinations unescorted.

In her letter to the editor on May 6, she wrote, "We as women on this campus have the right or privilege to be able to go anywhere without fear or protection." Although Tina seems to support women's rights she and others who share her opinion help to limit women's actions and undermine our human rights.

Entering an elevator and walking at night are not privileges. They are rights, and both women and men are harmed when these rights are not guaranteed and protected. Horocofsky asks that women use "common sense" and "good judgment" to restrict our movements in daily life. I suggest that instead of focusing on the common sense and good judgment of women, we ought to focus on the common sense and judgment of the men who threaten us.

To Horocofsky and women who agree with her position: Yes, use common sense, but do not buy into attitudes and social norms that limit the daily activities in which all persons should be able to safely engage.

Let's change and limit the problem, (norms that tell men it is OK to threaten and harm women) not the victims. Educate others, protest unfair and abusive actions and stand up for all rights of women, especially the everyday rights.

► LAFENE PRIVILEGE FEE SHOULD BE RAISED EVEN MORE

Editor,

Even though Lafene Health Center privilege fee has increased, it still isn't enough. Lafene will still lose staff members, which in turn means fewer office visits.

Lafene provides medical care for less than any local physician or hospital. Lafene, on an average, charges 30 to 50 percent less than anyone else.

If Lafene doesn't increase fees, they will be forced to increase some of their fees by 30 percent. Eventually, they will be forced to charge for office visits.

The only reasonable solution is to raise the fee.

► CONSERVATION RESERVE PROGRAM IN JEOPARDY WITH FARM BILL

Editor,

In light of the wind erosion that has occurred in recent months due to drought and high winds, the future of the Conservation Reserve Program is in jeopardy. Legislation in the 1996 Farm Bill has only allowed for one-year contract extensions and an "early-out" option. The contracts on more than 22 million acres of CRP will be allowed to expire by 1998.

Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman is quoted as saying, "This 'early out' option is important for several reasons. First, producers should have the opportunity to take advantage of the high market prices by planting more of their land. Second, the offer is consistent with USDA's responsibility of ensuring a grain supply that meets market demand. Third, offering an 'early-out' for productive, less erodible land is consistent with the Clinton Administration's commitment to an environmentally sound, cost-effective CRP."

Anyone who has a brain knows that once more wheat goes into production, those so called strong-market prices will weaken. Even with this year's poor wheat quality, the USDA will not have to worry about supplying the world's demand. So, farmers will have to weigh all the options before pulling acreage out of CRP.

In Kansas alone, there are 2.9 million acres entered in CRP with an annual cost of $152 million dollars per year. This averages to $52 per acre per year paid to the farmer.

According to Barry Flinchbaugh, K-State agricultural economist, "The farmer will see no economic benefit putting CRP acres back into production."

When you add up production costs, risk and the simple fact that soil quality of most CRP acres will not produce suitable yields, farmers should take the government's money and run.

For all of those who are unfamiliar with the Conservation Reserve Program, it is not another one of those get rich quick schemes. Since its implementation in 1986, CRP has reduced nationwide soil loss by 700 million tons per year. Sediment loading of our waterways has been cut by 100 million tons per year. The program plays a vital role in American water quality and the future of agriculture.

With all things considered, just what are Glickman's intentions?

It's time for greeks to play ball

Last August, as the Collegian's air conditioners groaned under a heat index of 110 degrees, I wrote my first column about greek life and some of the misconceptions surrounding it.

I made a point to differentiate between the greeks who live solely for the party and those who are intellectual, assertive individuals. It was and is an important column for me, because I have been a fraternity member since coming to K-State as a freshman in fall 1992.

There are many misconceptions about greek life. We exist under our individual chapter constitutions, our national constitution and the by-laws of our local Greek Affairs.

Hazing was made illegal years ago. We are not allowed to have kegs; every party must be registered with Greek Affairs, and we must meet strict guidelines for the distribution of alcohol.

However, as with any law, not everyone follows them. When a society does not follow its laws, that society begins to crumble.

It is true there are many positive aspects of greek life. Every year, greeks raise money and donate their time in philanthropies.

Annually, the all-fraternity men's GPA is higher than that of the all-University men's GPA. The greek system both at K-State and nationwide has built strong and influential corporate and political leaders.

Our negative actions, however, can neutralize those that are positive. Hazing is still very much a reality, as is substance abuse. The results of these actions tarnish the greek system as a whole, because we are one of the most visible cultures on this campus.

It is strange, because it seems as if members are playing ball, but not under an established set of rules. The time has come, however, to play ball by the official rules.

The rules of the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils were not created to punish or constrict greeks at K-State. They were created and passed to protect the system.

Myview

JUSTIN Wild

own follies.

Every year in the United States, chapters are closed down or sued because of accidents regarding both alcohol and hazing. The time may not be far off when K-State begins looking toward national collegiate disciplinary tactics in dealing with the greek system.

Greeks make up roughly 20 percent of the undergraduate student population at K-State. However, I believe that we do not always realize we are a minority on this campus.

High visibility is both a blessing and a curse.

Right now, we are up to bat. I can only hope we do not already have two strikes against us.

Justin Wild is a senior in English and education.

Home-grown candidate

Jeff Peterson has done the students of K-State a favor.

By announcing his candidacy for the Kansas Legislature in the 66th district, the former student body president has the opportunity to bring more K-State students into the political process than ever before.

I am not endorsing Peterson. I have been pleased with Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, and I have no intention of making a decision until I see their stands on the issues side-by-side.

But the mere presence of a well-known student leader in the election could do wonders for student-voter turnout.

Peterson is not the first student to make a run for the Legislature. He is not even the first in my five-year tenure at K-State, but in terms of name recognition, he is far and away the best-known.

That means he has also probably got a better chance of winning than other student candidates.

He is the first student to run for the Legislature since the city of Manhattan annexed campus, which makes local decisions that much more important to students.

Peterson will probably use his familiarity with the student body to try to win student votes. Student leaders are likely to support this effort with increased calls for local voter registration. This will force Hochhauser to pay greater attention to student needs.

This will give students a chance to choose between two candidates who genuinely care about student issues.

When that time comes, students have a responsibility to play their part. Peterson's candidacy will be meaningless if he wins simply because he is a student or a Republican, just as Hochhauser's win will be meaningless if it is because she is a Democrat or an incumbent.

The candidates are entitled to a decision based on the issues.

Myview

DAN Lewerenz

These will not be too hard to find. The Collegian has done an admirable job of covering local elections in the past and with a two-time student body president in the race one can assume the coverage will be that much more in-depth.

Evaluate Peterson's ideas critically. Review his record. Look at how he handled the athletic, student health and student publications fees, programs like Access the Future, etc. If you like what you see, vote for him. After all, students have done it enough times already. It must seem like second-nature.

Give Hochhauser the same consideration. Has she supported economic development initiatives? Has she supported student issues? Her record will likely be even more extensive than Peterson's — look it up and learn from it.

Whether Peterson wins or loses in November, he will probably bring attention to the elections, encourage more students to register to vote and make students more aware of how local and state politics affect them.

In this way, his candidacy means students are winners any way you slice it.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy and American ethnic studies.

MOTHER WONDERS IF CALL MADE A DIFFERENCE

Editor,
I have recently had the opportunity to read the April 26 Collegian, and I believe that one point in the article by Shana Newell needs to be clarified. I did receive a telephone call from football coach Bill Snyder. However he did not apologize for the assault by David Damon.
The phone call came Aug. 23, 1995, after I had made a call to Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. I telephoned Krause Aug. 18, 1995, after Amy discovered Damon was in violation of the sanctions imposed by K-State. I was concerned there had been a change in those sanctions and Amy had not been notified. I was also wondering if anyone was monitoring the situation.

Krause told me he would look into the situation and get back with me. About an hour later, he returned the call and said there had been a misunderstanding of the date on the sanctions, and I should expect a call from Snyder.

Snyder did call and apologize for the misunderstanding. He was under the impression the sanctions began after the fall semester began, and the problem would be taken care of at once. At no time did Snyder apologize for the assault.

I still do not understand how the issue of the date of sanctions became confused, as Amy maintained that her copy plainly stated "effective May 15, 1995." If I had not made the phone call, would David Damon still be in violation of the sanctions?

It was not an easy decision to allow Amy to return to K-State this year. As parents, we can only stand by with our love and support for her as she continues to grow with her K-State experience.

CLOSING OF LARAMIE NOT DETRIMENTAL TO 'VILLE

Editor,

It has come to the attention of some of the citizens in Manhattan that Laramie Street is closed. It has also been expressed that this is some kind of big inconvenience and a common nuisance to the general public.

I would say it might be somewhat of an inconvenience to the people who have a set pattern for the way they reach their destination, and this pattern would be slightly interrupted by the closing of Laramie.

I do not feel, however, that the closing of the street is a detriment to the Aggieville shopping area or in any way takes up the valuable time of those who normally use that route to get to Aggieville. It might mean they have to find a new route and it might be slightly longer, but only by a block or two.

To me, it seems a lot of people are not flexible in the way they get to certain places. I know that change is hard and that I, myself, am not one to accept it easily, but this is something that will hopefully beautify our town.

I live on the part of Laramie that is closed and attend school at Manhattan Christian College, which has requested the closing.

The city and the school are simply trying to figure out how much traffic will be affected by a permanent closing of the street for unification of the school's campus.

As it stands now the campus is divided into two halves, which disrupts the unity of the campus. The plans for the college include several new buildings and the remodeling of some existing buildings.

These improvements would allow the college to grow and educate students better.

The closing of Laramie is not something that is going to cause accidents, nor is it going to hurt business in Aggieville. There is no way that anyone can honestly say the closing of one city block is going to ruin Aggieville and cause more accidents. If Aggieville is the strong business area that it claims, and I believe it is, this minor closing will not hurt Aggieville.

I think that the closing of the street is a very good idea in that it will soon provide a more beautiful campus in our lovely town and give our town more of an opportunity to grow.

All the people complaining about the street being closed need to suck it up, rub some dirt on it and drive one block more down the road.

Bulldozers really hurt sportswriters

Have you ever felt like the world was getting harsher and meaner with every day that passed you by?

Well, yesterday that feeling hit me like a bulldozer moving down the steepest San Francisco street at about 100 miles per hour.

After going through my daily duties of editor's meetings and classes and arranging stories for the next day's paper, I sat down to write this column.

With illusions of grandeur regarding Kentucky Derby winner Grindstone and of possible libelistic statements running through my head about Dallas Cowboys' drugstar Michael Irvin, I opened the file on my computer that allows me access to the outside world. I opened the door to the Associated Press wire.

What I found sickened me.

I felt like my best friend had just found out he had

felt like

must have felt

they

what still countless others (baseball fans, of course)

felt like when Lou

"Today, I

I found

And

He

As

Many

► WICHITA STATE BASEBALL TEAM WINS MISSOURI VALLEY CONFERENCE TITLE

WICHITA (AP) — It wasn't strong hitting or outstanding pitching that clinched the Missouri Valley Conference baseball title for Wichita State on Tuesday. It was Mother Nature.

The rainout of WSU's four-game series at Southwest Missouri State in Springfield, Mo., means the Shockers are uncatchable in the remaining MVC games.

It will be the Shockers' 10th-consecutive league title. The last time the Shockers failed to win the Valley was in 1986, when some of the current team's players were in the third grade.

Wichita is 43-7 so far this season, with a 20-4 record in the conference.

The team is No. 1 in the Collegiate Baseball poll and No. 2 behind Florida in the Baseball America poll.

No league opponent has won more than one game in a series from WSU.

► ASSAULT CHARGES AGAINST FORMER NORTH CAROLINA STAR DEFERRED

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — NBA rookie and former North Carolina basketball star Rasheed Wallace has won a deferred prosecution on charges of assaulting his girlfriend. Chiquita Bryant, Wallace's girlfriend and mother of his child, filed the charges over the Easter weekend.

Wallace's attorney, Mike Grace, said Tuesday that the player's prosecution will be deferred for one year under certain conditions.

If the conditions are met, the case will be dismissed, Grace said.

Grace said Bryant and prosecutors agreed to the arrangement. Durham District Attorney Jim Hardin said Wallace's arrangement with the court includes community service and 12 months' probation.

Wallace will have to participate in a program that helps men change their attitudes about domestic violence.

Irvin's lawyer denies TV report

Associated Press

DALLAS — On Tuesday Michael Irvin's lawyer disputed a TV report that the Dallas Cowboys receiver has possessed cocaine three times since being indicted on felony drug charges.

"If they're trying to show that Michael Irvin did that, why didn't they give it to police?" Kevin Clancy said. "Because it didn't happen. That's why they didn't do it."

The mounting accusations may be wearing on Irvin, who recently told a columnist he's considering discussing his future somewhere else with Cowboys owner Jerry Jones.

Irvin conveyed his unhappiness even before Fort Worth TV station KXAS began airing its hidden camera footage of him discussing cocaine buys and use with Dennis Pedini, an associate and former security installer and Dallas Cowboys employee.

KXAS news director Dave Overton declined comment Tuesday regarding the report. However, the station confirmed Pedini was its informant after his identity was revealed Monday by Dallas television station WFAA.

Clancy said he has tried unsuccessfully to subpoena the unedited video and audio tapes.

"The main thing I'm looking for is the full video and full audio," he said. "I know how people edit tapes, and little things that get left off change the whole meaning of the quote."

But he did subpoena Pedini to appear Wednesday before State District Judge Manny Alvarez, who is presiding over the prosecution of Irvin and two women.

"I also want to know what motives Dennis had," Clancy said. "It's obvious he was trying to get something sensational. Was he paid? That's one of the things I want in my subpoena."

KXAS reported Tuesday that Mike Gillett, assistant Dallas County district attorney, told the station that he planned to subpoena its materials for review by a grand jury. Gillett did not immediately return telephone calls for comment.

The Cowboys and the NFL aren't commenting on the television report.

The first part of the series on Sunday showed Irvin holding a bag in his left hand that Pedini said was cocaine.

Irvin and Pedini are seen driving from an apartment complex after Irvin allegedly bought cocaine. Irvin is heard saying: "Here, you want some? ... A couple lines will help you."

Later, Irvin talks about steps he would take to keep his fingerprints from turning up on the bag.

"Before I give this to anybody, I'm gonna rip this off. Bam! There you go!"

Clancy said he wants to hear the raw audio to understand the sequence of events leading to those quotes and others.

"I don't know if it's been edited or not," he said. "I haven't heard any questions (being asked on the tape). All I hear are answers. We don't know what elicited those responses."

Also, the videos don't clearly show the cocaine, Clancy said.

The lawyer said the television report adds to the exasperation Irvin has felt since the March 4 drug bust led to his April 1 indictment. His trial is June 24. Irvin also recently was accused of assaulting a man outside a sports bar.

Former Giants star digested fake cocaine

Associated Press

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — Just before his arrest, former NFL Pro Bowl linebacker Lawrence Taylor swallowed the fake crack cocaine he was accused of buying from an undercover officer, police said.

Taylor was among 18 people arrested during a random drug sting Friday night. He was charged with trying to purchase $100 worth of crack.

"He informed us that he ate all of it," city police officer Len Sloan said Monday.

Sloan, who booked Taylor, said he long had admired the player.

"I was surprised and hurt more than anything else," Sloan said.

Taylor later was freed on $5,000 bond.

Hugh Munn, spokesman for the State Law Enforcement Division, said the fake crack is made from food-grade substances and is harmless if swallowed.

Taylor, who was a leader in the New York Giants' drive to Super Bowl championships after the 1986 and 1990 seasons, later said he was having personal problems. "I oughta kill myself," he told the Sun News of Myrtle Beach.

Taylor's Myrtle Beach lawyer, Tommy Brittain, said he did not believe Taylor would actually hurt himself.

"He's concerned and anxious to do the right thing like everybody else," Brittain said Monday. "He wants to face the future with a hopeful attitude and put anything that has happened bad to him behind him. ... He's strong and has never been under any kind of suicide watch."

Bobby Cupo, Taylor's agent, also said he was not worried about Taylor.

After his release, Taylor attended a sports memorabilia auction at a nightclub later Friday night, but he skipped a charity golf tournament Saturday.

Taylor, 37, could be sentenced to two years in prison if convicted, but a prosecutor said jail time was unlikely because Taylor is accused of buying drugs, not selling them.

Brittain said he planned to meet with prosecutors in the next 30 days. At the pretrial conference, Taylor could agree to a plea bargain or request a trial.

Finding a family

Foster families can create healthy home for children story by Nikki Prentice

A foster home is more than just a place for a troubled child to spend a couple hours, days or months during difficult times at the child's relative home.

It is a place where children can escape from a battering world, learn valuable lessons and also teach adults a lesson or two.

Foster parent programs are a service provided through the Kansas Children's Service League, a non-profit United Way agency.

The program provides care for abused, neglected or behavior-problem children from newborns to 17-year-olds who are experiencing extreme conflict or crises within their homes.

Most foster children are families with 13- to 15-year-olds.

The KCSL agency is more than a century old. It has branch offices in 17 other Kansas cities including a Manhattan office established in the mid-1970s.

Foster care children are divided into three categories, said Sandy Johnson, social worker at the KCSL branch in Manhattan.

The categories are children in need of care due to illness or a crisis in their family; children who have experienced abuse or neglect; and juvenile offenders who have committed an offense that could be considered a crime if they were adults.

Johnson said the majority of foster children have experienced a combination of physical, emotional and/or sexual abuse.

Johnson recalled a few situations she has experienced since she joined the KCSL two years ago.

She said one mother neglected her children, at 2, 3 and 4 years old, making them fend for meals.

She also recalled an infant who became a victim of shaken baby syndrome. Shaken baby syndrome is when an infant experiences physical and mental damage through being physically shaken.

Anyone of legal adult age is eligible to be a foster care provider.

One couple, who attend K-State, joined the foster care program last year.

Aljean Clark, junior in criminology, and her husband, William Clark, sophomore in criminology, heard about the foster care program on an advertisement.

"We wanted to do something to help the community and to help kids," Aljean Clark said.

Since the Clark home was approved for foster care, the family has cared for nine children, including the 10-year-old and 1-year-old who are still living in the home.

The Clarks like children of all ages and races.

"We take anyone. We prefer children age zero to 12-years-old but sometimes it doesn't work that way," said Aljean Clark, who is also mother of two teenage sons.

"Sometimes you have to disregard your personal references and help out. We are African American and have had black, white and mixed foster children," she said.

"We like all races to be foster parents but there are certain rules that have to be followed," Johnson said.

Johnson encourages college students to become foster mentors.

"Actually, with their schedules, students could be very flexible in providing foster care," Johnson said.

Before individuals are accepted as foster care providers, two background checks are conducted by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and Social Rehabilitation Services.

An in-depth home study, health assessments and reference letters are part of foster-care licensing.

In addition, the clients' homes must meet health and safety standards set by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment regarding space requirements.

While the background clearances and health standards are in progress, potential foster parents attend a required 30-hour training session through the KCSL agency.

The training sessions are designed to assist parents with coping techniques that can be used with handling the foster children. It also prepares foster parents for when foster children reunify with their relative families.

Foster families are responsible only for providing foster children with daily needs such as food and shelter. Each child is issued a medical card by SRS to cover any medical, dental and therapy care.

Foster families receive a daily reimbursement per child as an attempt to cover the expense of an additional family member, Johnson said.

A social worker visits the home monthly to provide support for the family and foster kids. The visit also is to ensure the foster service is satisfactory.

Foster parenting is a full-time job. It isn't just providing a home for some troubled children.

"You have to really want to do it," Aljean Clark said. "It takes a lot of human kindness to get over some of your own hangups on parenting. You learn a lot about parenting and sometimes the kids teach you things. It takes a lot of patience and you aren't going to get rich."

Johnson said she agrees.

As of last month, Manhattan's KCSL branch is serving about 30 foster children from the Manhattan area.

The problem is not finding children to care for, it is finding families who will care for the kids.

"Our greatest need right now is for families who will provide care for 11 to 17 years of age and also for teen-age males," Johnson said. "There really is a need. The children have the basic rights for a good childhood experience."

Watching the foster children change is just one exciting part of being foster parents, the Clarks said.

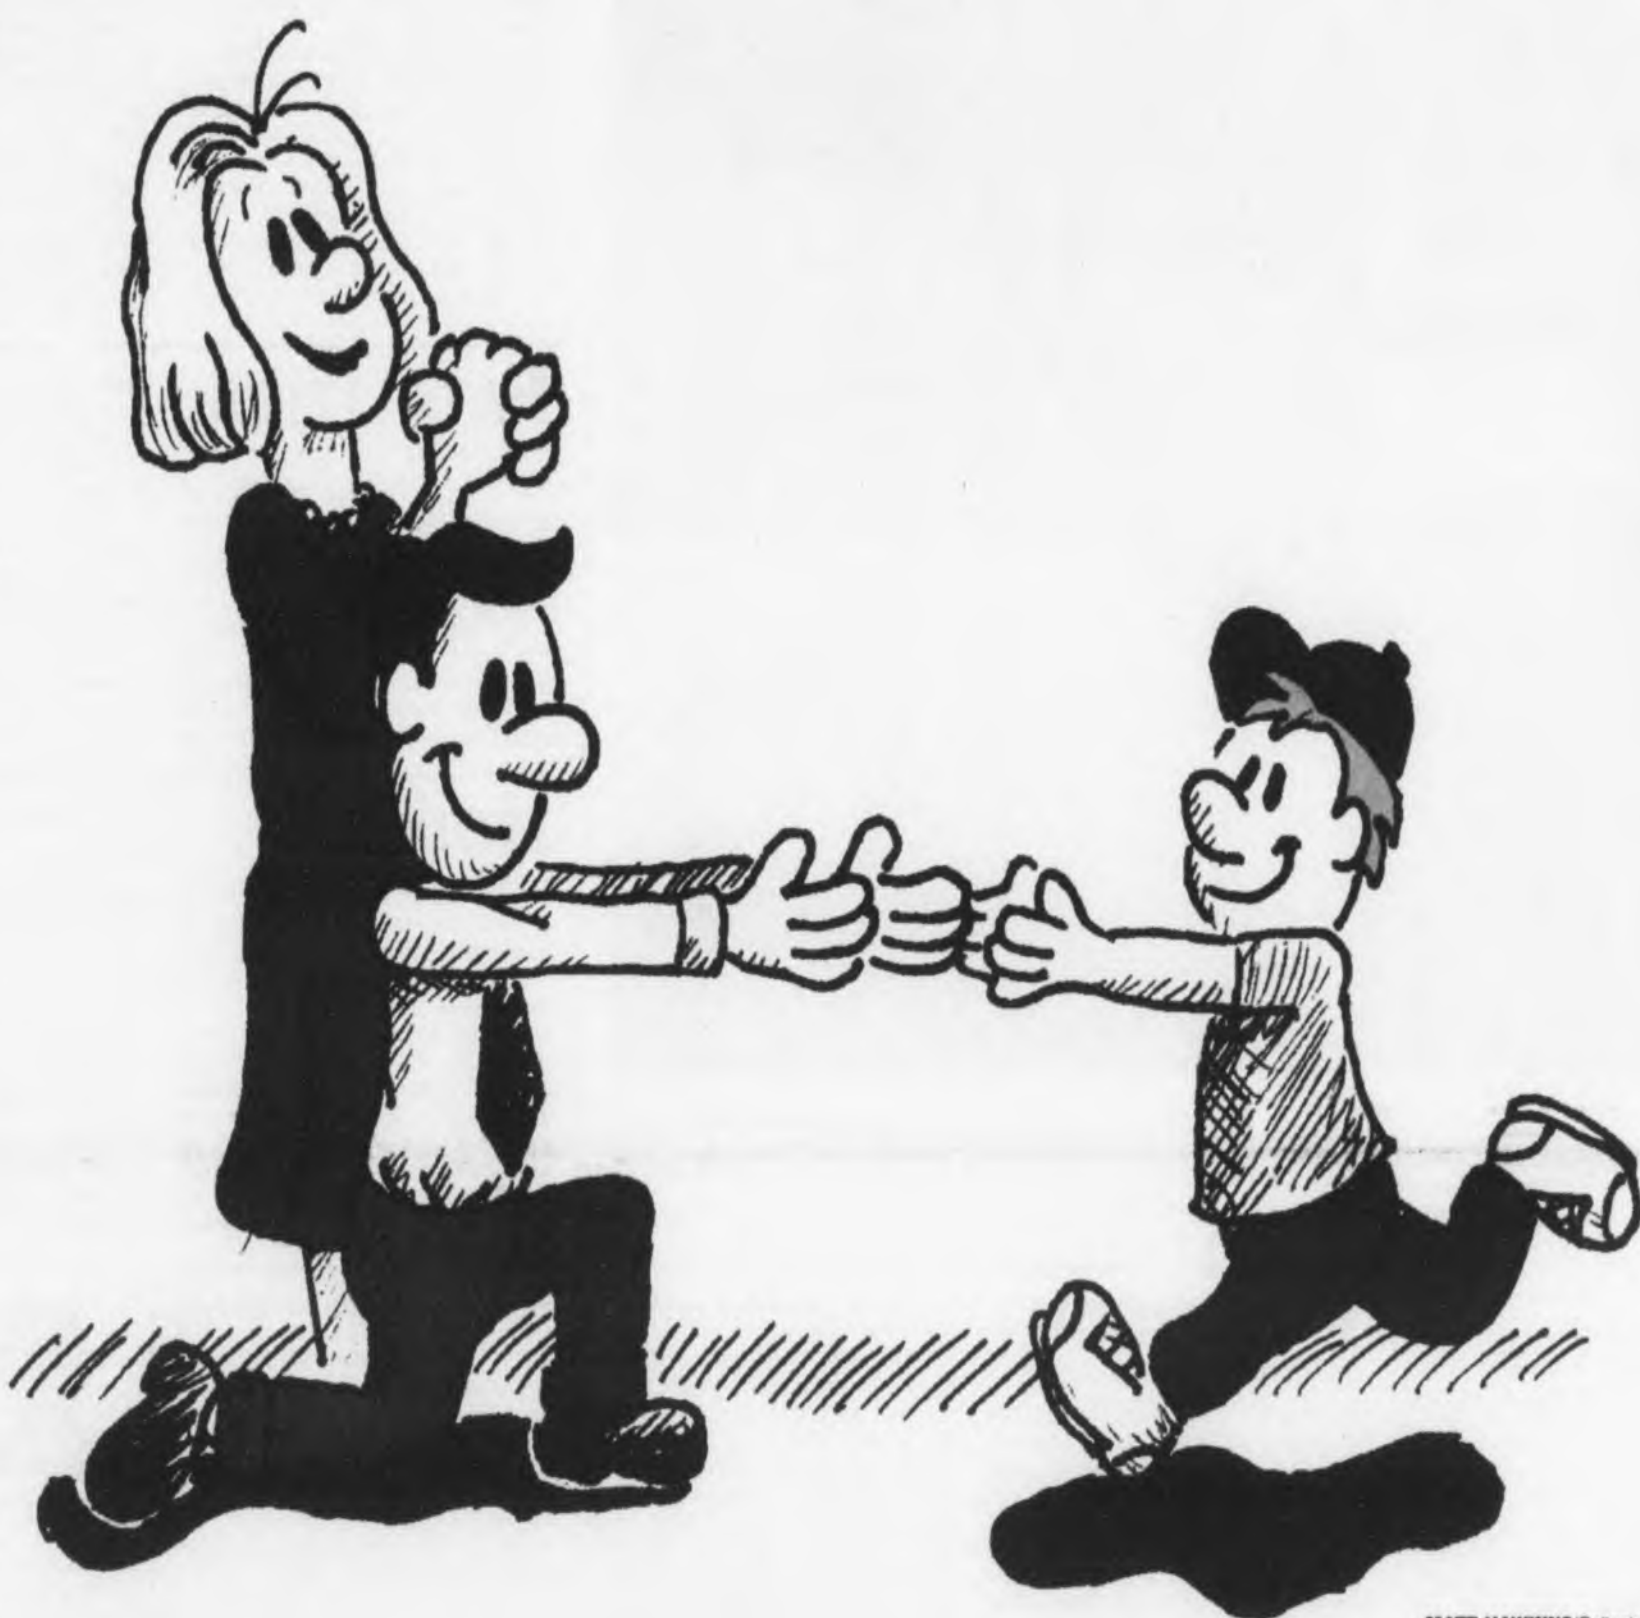

"We enjoy kids and can see we've made a difference in their lives. Most kids just need a little love and a couple of hugs," Aljean Clark said. "You aren't going to help them overnight, it takes a lot of time."

People of all backgrounds have something to offer foster children.

"Even though you might think you don't have anything to offer, you do," Aljean Clark said. "You don't have to be rich. The one thing that is free is love."

the 80 people working on design and construction and ensuring that the buildings are ready for the Olympics.

"This includes new construction, adaptation of existing structures and construction of temporary structures," McAfee said.

"This is a lot of work," McAfee said.

"It's a very exciting time but also a very frustrating time."

Her position includes overseeing the demolition or renovation of the Olympic structures after the games to fit their Legacy purpose.

"Legacy is what use these facilities will have after the Olympic games," McAfee said. "It's what is left for the community."

For example, the Olympic stadium, basis for Olympic track and field, will have a Legacy use for the Atlanta Braves baseball team.

The stadium will be retrofitted by removing 40,000 of the 85,000 seats to create the outfield for the baseball diamond, McAfee said.

"The Olympics have different requirements and criteria than any other event," McAfee said.

She said the medical requirements for the Olympics are very secure.

There are areas in Olympic stadium that coaches cannot go into with the athletes so that the athletes can be screened for drug use, McAfee said.

This kind of security is not necessary for baseball, she said.

"There are things that will go on at the Olympic scale that have nothing to do with baseball," McAfee said.

The renovation of the Olympic stadium into a baseball diamond will require the removal of more than just seats.

The field hockey stadium being built at Clark Atlanta University will have a Legacy use of a track-and-field stadium, with the track from the Olympic Stadium being relocated to Clark Atlanta University after the Olympics, McAfee said.

Other buildings will be returned to their original use or torn down.

"Some buildings cost as much as $10 million to put up and could cost $10 million to tear down," McAfee said.

McAfee said she anticipates attempting to complete all work by the end of 1997. She said she will then return her attention to her position as senior manager for Charles F. McAfee Architects, Engineers and Planners.

"Apparently, I get to keep the torch that I run with," Bever said.

"I just pass on the flame to the next runner."

Bever said she has had to sign releases to give permission to use her name and image as a runner of the Olympic torch and was told not to wear any hair spray or flammable clothing while running.

"I even get an Olympic newsletter now because I'm a part of all this," Bever said.

Bever said all her friends are excited for the day she gets to run. "It is kind of overwhelming," Bever said. "I'm excited, though."

"In a way, I just want it to be over. I could just see myself tripping or something and putting out the flame."

The figures confirm the fears of groups that oppose the new speed limits. Others said the higher speeds simply mean it's now legal to drive as fast as people always have illegally.

"Overall, we're all driving closer to the same speed now," said Bob Morrow, spokesman for the National Motorists Association, which fought hard for speed limit increases. "The limit is more reasonable. And that's going to make things overall safer."

But even Morrow has concerns: "I'll admit the accidents we see will probably be more severe."

It's too early to say whether speed limits will affect insurance premiums. It could take more than a year before insurance companies can document any conclusive trends.

"But if severe accidents increase, as history has shown us when we raise limits, rates will probably go up maybe 5 percent," said Michael Erwin, spokesman for the Insurance Information Institute in Washington.

Fuel consumption, which some said would increase drastically, increased minimally.

"Normally, we use about 7.6 million 42-gallon barrels of gasoline a day," said Sheryl Trench, spokeswoman for the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation in New York City.

"We estimate we're using about 50,000 more barrels a day with new limits."

a little less formal. There will be opportunities to have individual interviews and only a couple of parties, Sarber said.

Next fall, formal rush will be conducted by the Southwest Missouri State Tri-Sigma chapter and a national group that will be sent to K-State.

The redevelopment rush will be conducted by several Tri-Sigma chapters throughout the state.

This year's current members won't be involved in rush except in alumni relations.

Sarber also said next fall the house would probably be closed in terms of living arrangements.

A consultant will live in the house, and it will be open for meetings and any other reason that the chapter might need, but new members might not live there.

This year's members won't be allowed to live in the house, either, due to their alumni status.

The house could be opened up in the spring, depending on the living situations for the new members.

Sarber said the national organization is proud of the way the house has handled the situation.

"The women were really very courageous in supporting this decision. We're very proud of the women," Sarber said.

Although the current members of Tri-Sigma will not be as involved in the house next year, they are still supportive of the plan.

"I think the general feeling is that we're looking forward to seeing Tri-Sigma grow at K-State and become stronger," said Becki Blankenship, current Tri-Sigma president.

audio tape duplication machines and a multi-standard videotape duplication system, 12 multimedia computer work stations which will later expand to 20, and six Panasonic VCR/TV units.

Finally, there will be a satellite dish and receiver that will allow for linking of programming in a variety of languages.

The satellite installation is scheduled for May 15 and will be on the roof of Throckmorton Hall. It will be connected via fiber optic cable to the learning center.

"The modern languages faculty plan to use the Language Learning Center as an extension of classroom activities," Shaw said.

He said the students are pleased and the improved facility will provide a friendly, comfortable place to learn.

"Students will be able to strengthen their skills, explore new materials to supplement their studies and obtain current news from satellite programming and World Wide Web resources," Shaw said.

she should. I think she ought to run on her record and tell us things like why she voted against the highway bill that means so much to the city of Manhattan, why she voted for a prevailing wage addendum that would have driven up the cost of Kansas state construction projects, and many other things that I'm sure will be brought out."

Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, currently holds the 66th district seat.

She has not yet decided whether she will run for reelection.

The district, including the west side of Manhattan and K-State's campus, is comprised mostly of people aged 18-29, including a number of K-State and Manhattan Christian College students.

Peterson, 23, said he does not see age as a factor.

"I think I can relate to people of all ages," Peterson said.

"Well over 50 percent (of the district) is between ages 18 and 29, so if you look at that, just by my age I fall in the middle of that category. But a lot of students vote at home."

"I just think I'm serious, I've worked hard, I'll be up-to-date on all the issues, I'm in line with the views of the people in the district and that age really isn't a factor."

One group Peterson said he does not intend to appeal to is Political Action Committees.

He said he will not accept PAC contributions, instead focusing on the 20,000 special interests living in this district.

"I do want to clarify something," Hostetler said.

"When Jeff says, 'No gifts,' we will accept contributions. What Jeff's trying to make clear is he won't accept PAC money as his opponent has — a great deal of it. But he will accept contributions, political contributions within the law."

Peterson said that is one of many differences between his campaign and Hochhauser's.

"I think there will be a clear difference in this campaign between what we have and what is possible," Peterson said.

"There's a clear choice and a clear need for positive change."

Commission passes program

Commissioners exclude armory in budget for improvements

Chris Oakley
staff writer

After holding five work sessions on the Capital Improvements Program, city commissioners completed the process by agreeing to the program Tuesday night.

The program establishes guidelines for the improvements budget for 1997-2002.

In keeping with a balanced financial forecast, commissioners had to prioritize projects they considered to be most important for the city.

"They're all good projects," Mayor Sydney Carlin said.

"Everything that is in there is well thought out."

Commissioners decided not to include plans for a new National Guard armory, which was recommended by city administration.

The armory would have cost the city $500,000 over two years.

Commissioner Justin Kastner said the project would take away from other more important projects such as funding for a new parking lot at the city's senior center.

"It cuts into city services that would have been funded if the armory had never come about," he said.

The commission decided to eliminate both the armory and a proposal to improve the Sunset Cemetery Road.

In place of the two projects, the commission decided to agree to fund the senior center parking lot, devote $200,000 toward a comprehensive transportation plan, and to spend the remaining funds toward a Linear Trail master plan or toward the library enhancement project.

Because the library project is not included in the CIP, the money would essentially become property tax relief.

Commissioner Steve Hall said the property tax relief will be equivalent to about 1/4 of a mill, which is equal to about $30,000 each year for 15 years.

Hall said tax relief and improving city streets were important issues to him.

"I definitely would support re-prioritizing some of our needs," he said.

"I would like to see some property tax relief to our citizens."

Carlin said the armory was important for Manhattan and she would have liked to see at least some funding for the project.

She said other funds from the county and state may be available.

"We need to keep it alive a while to ascertain if there is support at the county and state level," she said.

Carlin said Manhattan may be competing with other communities for the armory.

"It's important to realize that we are competing with other cities for the armory," she said.

"I've been given information that other communities in the area may be able to work with the state on that," she said.

Commissioner Edith Stunkel said she was told that Manhattan is not in danger of losing the armory.

"I'd like to thank the National Guard for their frankness in that regard," she said.

Stunkel said the decision to not fund the armory was a difficult one.

"There is a great deal of public support as well as concerns about the armory."

"Obviously the National Guard is a very valuable part of the community," Stunkel said.

Stunkel said the present armory may be able to be renovated to meet the needs of the National Guard and community.

"The current armory is austere, but workable," she said.

Hall said he was proud of the effort put into the CIP by both city administration and the commission.

"We've really taken a serious look at what are some community needs and at least looked at some property tax relief," he said.

"I will come back with some more suggestions for property tax relief."

In other business, the commission decided to sell a parcel of city-owned land to Charles Jackson for $208,000. The land is located in the industrial park.

In a proposal submitted to the city, Jackson said he intends to use the land for such entities as a convenience store and self-service car wash.

The city declined to sell two other tracts of land because the bids received were lower than the appraised value.

Joe Knopp, who represents Leavenworth Intersection Investors Partnership, said the group was willing to pay $46,000 for the land where Taco Tico used to be at the intersection of Leavenworth Street and Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

The appraised value of the land is $369,000.

Knopp said the land is not worth that much because there is no access to the site because of construction.

"It seems to me that by definition that property has no value," he said.

"I want you to understand the Taco Tico property is inaccessible."

"The only value is maybe as a helicopter pad," he said.

Knopp said the city may end up losing more tax dollars if the land continues to be city-owned.

He said the school board and county also lose money if the land is not privately owned.

Knopp said the partnership had planned on selling the land.

Students to present '60s show 'Hair'

Director decides to perform 'Hair' after watching CNN

Rhonda A. Lee
staff reporter

The musical "Hair" is coming to campus.

This is the first time the show will be produced on campus.

Luke Kahlich, director and choreographer of the show, got the inspiration to do the show one night after watching CNN.

He said many of the same issues America and the world were wrestling with when the musical was originally produced in the 1960s are the same issues dealt with today.

"It just struck me that they were talking about all the same issues," Kahlich said.

"Maybe it's a different time, but the issues about sexuality, about gender, about racism, about war and peace, about how we treat one another, they're all still here."

"So really, I think it is relevant," he said.

Kahlich believes this production will be successful on this campus because it is something college students can relate to.

"I think it has an energy," he said.

"The score is very different and very much a rock score, so I think it also has the potential of still being very appealing to the college-age population," he said.

Kahlich said the costume designer for the show suggested those wishing to be in the production start growing out their hair now, so it will be a good length in time for the show's opening.

"We have both scripts and cassette tapes of the score available for checkout in 129 Nichols," he said.

Auditions for "Hair" will be the first week of classes, at 7 p.m. August 26 and 27, on the stage in McCain Auditorium.

PHYSICS

Professor wins award for teaching method

Kris Bethes
staff reporter

Lecturing is not a way of life.

Dean Zollman, professor of physics, has been selected as K-State's second Distinguished University Teaching Scholar, and it has nothing to do with lectures.

"Anything but lecture," Zollman said. "I try to avoid lecture as much as possible. Most material deals with hands-on."

Zollman has been recognized as the 1996-97 recipient of the University Teaching Scholar's Chair Award. This award looks at his innovation and excellence in undergraduate teaching.

As a result of earning this award, Zollman will receive a $2,500 addition to his base pay, release time and a graduate teaching assistant.

He will also receive a $2,000 Commerce Bank award, funded by the William T. Kemper Foundation and the Commerce Bankshares Foundation and coordinated by the KSU Foundation, and a one-time allocation of $2,500 in state operating funds.

James Coffman, K-State provost, established the University Distinguished Teaching Scholar's Chair in 1994 to award and encourage excellence in undergraduate teaching at K-State.

"Dean Zollman exemplifies the teacher-scholar in a rigorous and definitive way," Coffman said. "This is a necessary aspect of modern universities, as the stakes continue to go up in undergraduate teaching and learning."

Zollman has created numerous multimedia teaching tools.

These tools for physics instruction include CD-ROM, videodiscs and digital video. These have been funded by the National Science Foundation, the Annenberg Corporation and other sources.

Zollman has co-authored "The Fascination of Physics" and has made six videodiscs and a CD-ROM and written several articles.

His works have received national recognition, and he has given talks in England, the Netherlands, Hungary, Germany, Denmark, Japan, China, the United Arab Emirates, Poland and several cities in North America.

One of Zollman's goals is to find ways to counter the negative attitudes many students have toward learning physics. As a teacher and through research projects, Zollman wants to give students confidence in the ability to learn the subject.

"Students who feel that they cannot learn physics are unlikely to have a positive attitude toward attempting that learning," Zollman said. "As teachers of undergraduates, we must recognize the problem and improve the attitude and, particularly, increase the confidence which students have toward the learning of physics."

"Not only does Professor Zollman teach physics majors and future teachers, he is a world-famous researcher in the use of modern technology to improve teaching effectiveness," James Legg, head of the Department of Physics, said.

Finding the perfect Summer jobs

■ Opportunities for employment abound during summer vacation

Kris Bethea
staff reporter

It is almost summer vacation, and it is time to find a job to pay for all those summer activities or maybe just make money for fall.

If students are wanting to stick around the Manhattan area but only want to work for the summer, they have many opportunities for employment if they apply soon.

Manpower Temporary Services in Manhattan has a wide variety of jobs from clerical jobs in offices to industrial jobs.

"Come in and apply at our office," Kristen Slomka, service representative at Manpower, said.

The Manpower office is located at 555 Poyntz Ave. Students can come in from 8:15 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:45 to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday to fill out an application.

"Most positions are 40 hours a week," Slomka said. "But some can be part-time or temporary."

All jobs are within a 30-mile radius around Manhattan, and most are in Manhattan.

"After a student comes in and fills out an application, we look at it and see if there are any open jobs," Slomka said. "If there are jobs available, we will bring them in for an interview. If there are no jobs available at the time, we will hold the application indefinitely."

Jobs at Manpower can pay anywhere from $4.75 to $6 per hour depending on the job and the skills of the employee.

Another place students can go to look for jobs is the Job Service Center at 621 Humboldt St.

Students can come in and fill out an application 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

"Jobs range from unskilled laborers to cashiers at fast-food and retail stores," Lorene Oppy, Job Service Center manager, said.

The student applying gets interviewed right away.

If hired, a student can earn $5 to $7 per hour.

For students who want to travel and see some of the world this summer, employment opportunities are wide open.

Cruise ships and traveling are opportunities that can be achieved with the help of the Progressive Media company in Seattle. The number to get information on the cruise ship and travel program is (206) 971-3550, ext. C57686.

"We are a student employment service," Jeff, Progressive Media lead sales representative, said. "We research the job industries and contact various companies about employment opportunities."

There is a one-time fee of $49.95, which gets each applicant a program with five different parts.

"Any company with a fee system is required by law to give money back if the customer is not satisfied," Jeff said. "The student must read the stipulations of getting their money back and follow them implicitly."

The money-back guarantee given by Progressive Media requires that the program the company sends to the person is returned in full after a 90-day period of looking it over. After the 90 days, the student will have up to one year to return the materials to get a full refund.

Included in this program is a list of companies which are currently hiring and which positions are open.

Students also receive the "Job Hunters' Resource Guide," which can help with any local job search. It includes instructions on how to write resumes and cover letters and describes good job-search etiquette.

Also included is a newsletter which is updated every quarter and a hotline which applicants can call to check on changes. The hotline is updated once a month.

"The key to getting a job on a cruise ship is timing and persistence," Kevin Lustgarten, Progressive Media vice president, said. "There is a lot of interest in these jobs, so there is a lot of competition."

Jobs can vary between large cruise ships and smaller ships, such as ones on the Mississippi.

There are a few seasonal cruise-ship positions, like youth counselors.

Many parents bring their children in the summer, so the children need something to do. That is why youth counselors are needed more in the summer, Lustgarten said.

There are also many land-tour positions available.

"In Alaska, employees can run buses to the glacier or other sites of interest," Lustgarten said. "The base pay is small, only $2,500 to $3,000 per month, but tour guides receive tips, and I have known some people to earn from $7,000 to $10,000 per month with base pay."

People giving land tours also receive discounts from local businesses. Students interested in the Alaska summer employment opportunity can call (206) 971-3510, ext. A57685, for information on applications.

These Alaska jobs are for fishing companies.

There is some office work, and with previous experience a student can be a foreman.

There are also some cooking jobs and jobs in canneries or processing plants.

These jobs do not pay as well as those on fishing boats.

Job pay varies with each company. The size of the company and the region the company is located in determines how busy a season will be and determines the pay.

Students can earn from $3,000 to $6,000 per month.

Once the student is hired, pay and reimbursement for travel to Alaska vary from company to company. An explanation of reimbursement, room and board and pay is included in the program.

"This company has been a service to students and people since 1987," Jeff said. "We are a member of the Better Business Bureau, and we constantly monitor the companies we hire for."

The key to getting a job on a cruise ship is timing and persistence.

Clinton honors dead soldier

QUICKread

► Fifty-one years after his death in World War II, Pfc. Willy F. James Jr. received the Medal of Honor, along with six other black soldiers.

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pfc. Willy F. James Jr., a 25-year-old whose head was nearly sheared off by Nazi fire, was killed on a foggy April morning in 1945.

The White House has announced that President Clinton plans to give the Kansas City native and six other black soldiers the nation's highest military award, the Medal of Honor.

The announcement shocked one white World War II veteran who fought in James' unit, who believes James never distinguished himself.

"When I heard about his congressional Medal of Honor, I just about went nuts," said Donald Weishaupt, a former platoon commander who recalls stepping over James' body. "It's a discredit to the people who have really won the Medal of Honor."

James was one of 2,221 black men allowed to volunteer for front-line infantry units after the Battle of the Bulge depleted the then-segregated U.S. Army.

James and the other black soldiers were nominated for the Medal of Honor after an Army-commissioned report questioned why 433 white soldiers received the award in the war but not one was given to a black soldier.

A study coordinated by Shaw University in Raleigh, N.C., found evidence that racism interfered with blacks earning medals.

William S. Harden, 78, a black soldier from Cincinnati, remembers James as an excellent shot who scouted ahead and tried to aid a fallen white officer before being shot himself.

John D. Hemsley, 75, another black soldier who lives near St. Louis, tells a similar story: James, an aggressive but cautious soldier, was a point man for the platoon, moving ahead several hundred yards. A white officer, 1st Lt. Armand J. Serrabella, accompanied James, who was feeling uneasy.

Harden said he recalls seeing James run to Serrabella's aid, firing at Germans as he moved. James tried to drag the lieutenant to safety before being shot himself.

This version concurs with what Shaw University researchers found in Army records detailing James' qualifications for the Distinguished Service Cross. The cross was awarded five months after his death.

Weishaupt says the troops were walking along, lining each side of the road, when a short burst of gunfire broke out, felling Serrabella, James and several others. He wasn't aware until recently that James had received the Distinguished Service Cross.

Elliott Converse, a retired Air Force colonel living near Denver, assisted Shaw researchers in the 15-month study. Converse said James was nominated in 1945 for the Distinguished Service Cross.

Weishaupt, 72, who lives near Dallas, said he knew and respected the now-deceased Brown, one of Weishaupt's commanding officers. He says Brown's involvement makes the award more plausible.

James never married. He had a sister, but she was estranged from the family in the 1940s. A black soldier from the platoon visited with James' mother after the war, but the two lost contact in the early 1970s.

His official award records are closed until September because of a move of Army archival information from one government annex to another.

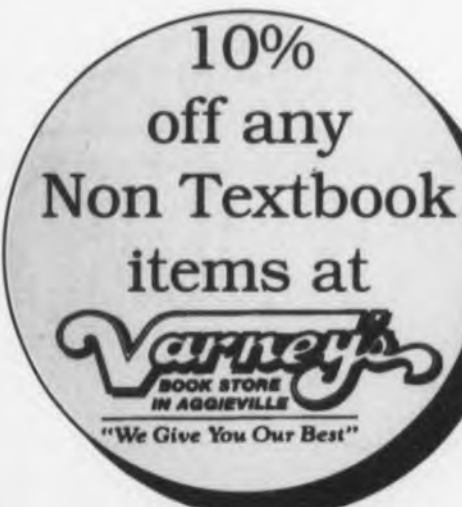

Daniel Gibran, a Shaw professor who was the study's principal investigator, said researchers interviewed some veterans but thought the Army's records were more accurate.

They knew veterans' stories would be tainted by the bitterness some blacks feel for that segregated era and the racial stereotypes commonly held by whites in the 1940s.

"Memories fade and give with time," Gibran said. "And old soldiers embellish stories."

"The teaching at Johnson County Community College is first-rate. Summer is the perfect opportunity to take a class at JCCC." —John Thorne, Overland Park, Kan.

"I was attending a large state university when I decided to enroll in a summer class at JCCC," recalls student John Thorne. "I was back in Kansas City for the summer, and I wanted to get a class out of the way so my fall load would be lighter."

"I intended to go back to the university in the fall. But my experience at JCCC was so positive, I decided to stay and finish my first two years here."

"What sold me on JCCC was the fact that I had real instructors here, not teaching assistants and grad students."

Smatterings

by Scott Allen Miller

Well, this is the last Smatterings for this semester. It is also my last Smatterings. I am hanging it up and graduating. My fellow Collegianites seem sad to see me go, but only to my face. I suggested throwing an orgy to commemorate my tenure. Everyone I invited refused to come. I will try not to miss you folks too much. It will not be very difficult.

HEIL MARGE

She has done it again. While most racists are content to make asses of themselves by expressing their bigoted views in private, Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott has a compulsion to show her fat white butt to all of America.

On an ESPN program Sunday night, Schott claimed Adolf Hitler, whose actions she has defended in the past, started out as a good leader but just got a little crazy and went too far later on.

After all, she said, he did make German factories productive. That is, instead of being a crazed genocidal megalomaniac, he was just a little misguided.

SCOTT ALLEN Miller

Apparently no one has ever pointed out to her that those factories were busy producing the crematoriums, barbed wire, tanks, guns and warplanes Hitler used to try to conquer Europe and try to wipe out Judaism.

She was suspended during the 1993 season for repeatedly using racial and ethnic slurs. During that time, she underwent sensitivity training.

It paid off. This time she managed to offend Jews and plenty of other people without using any slurs.

BUT DOES HE WEAR BOXERS OR BRIEFS?

Recently Senate Majority Leader Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., told the Associated Press one of his favorite television programs is "Murder, She Wrote." What a shock.

In order to get the loyalty of older voters, Mayor Quimby, a character in the animated television program "The Simpsons," once promised to build a highway named after Ben Matlock, the main character of a television show that is extremely popular among senior citizens. I expect Dole to propose construction of an Angela Lansbury Expressway through Florida soon.

THIS DOES NOT QUITE ADD UP

Walter Petryshyn of North Brunswick, N.J., has been charged with bludgeoning his wife to death.

The murder was the end of a downward spiral for Petryshyn. It all started when he published a textbook that had an error in it. He made a big deal of it, although by all accounts the publisher, Cambridge University Press, was happy with the book. After discovering the mistake, Petryshyn began to suffer from imaginary medical problems and depression. Then, it is alleged, he offed his spouse.

So if you are married to someone who is writing a textbook or journal article, please remember to find your spouse a good copy editor. For your own safety.

Parking to hear ideas

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

Proposed changes to K-State parking regulations will be the topic of a forum at 3 p.m. today in the Union Big 8 Room.

"This is an annual hearing regarding any changes in the parking regulations," Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

The forum will give students and community members a chance to voice their concerns about parking proposals.

Archer said there have been crowds at past hearings ranging from 10 to 125 people depending on the issues, but this year's proposed changes will probably not draw a large crowd.

"This year I don't think we'll have a great number of participants," Archer said. "There were no fee increases proposed."

He said students only come in large numbers when there is a proposal to increase student parking fees.

While parking fees for students will not increase, the proposed Parking Services changes include an increase in the reserve stall fee.

The increase in the reserve stall fee is intended to decrease the number of reserve stalls on campus.

Other proposed changes include the relocation of Parking Services to Edwards Hall, and the establishment of a campus shuttle.

The proposed shuttle would be available to transport those with a fee card to various buildings on campus and in the surrounding area.

The fee card for the shuttle would cost a proposed $25 a semester or $50 a year.

While Parking Services is moving, parking permits for students will still be available at the K-State Student Union during fee payment, Archer said.

FORUM TIME

Parking Services will listen to public opinion at 3 p.m. today in the Union Big 8 Room.

Parking Services will also be looking to make other changes on campus.

"This fall we will begin to enforce proper bicycle parking and traffic," he said.

Archer said accidents were increasing between bicycles and pedestrians on sidewalks and bicycles and vehicles on roads.

Parking Services hopes to hire more staff to establish a bicycle safety patrol on campus, he said. There is also concern about people parking bikes improperly, but Archer said bicycle permits will remain free.

PARKING

Renewal letter gives wrong permit price

Rhonda A. Lee
staff reporter

Pricing information printed for renewal of parking decals was incorrectly stated on applications for parking permit renewals sent to faculty and staff by Parking Services.

According to the letter, the cost of parking permits paid by payroll deduction plan was printed as being 20 payments of $3.25.

The actual price should have read 20 payments of $3.75, along with a $10 down-payment.

"This was a simple typo sent out in a letter to faculty/staff. The person typing the letter mistook a two for a seven," Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

Parking Services is also asking faculty, staff and students to keep their current hanging permits.

New decal stickers with the new expiration dates will be issued upon renewal of next year's permits.

Archer regrets any problems that have arisen because of the mistake.

"We are truly sorry for any inconvenience this may have caused to them," he said.

Tubby's throws finals party

Darren Whitley
staff reporter

Testosterone, drink specials and crowd prizes will be featured by Tubby's Pub for its final school year celebration Friday.

Owner Mike Trout said he has planned day-long festivities and is hoping for an "Animal House" atmosphere.

"I just want to offer as many things as we can do in one day's time," he said.

Planned for the celebration are free hamburgers between 1 and 2 p.m., and Jeff Barrett will begin playing at 5:30 p.m. and conclude at the beginning of the Tubby's Chubbies calendar contest at 7 p.m.

Trout said he hopes to make the Chubbies contest an annual event.

"I want the big boys of K-State to come down and have a good time with it," he said.

The contest will spill out into Laramie Plaza, where Tubby's will have a stage, dance floor, barbecue and bar set up.

The nationally-renowned Jagerettes, who are sponsored by Jagermeister, will be selling shots in their skimpy outfits, Trout said.

Men interested should register for the contest by Thursday. All interested men will be accepted, Trout said.

Contestants may use any gimmick they like to show off their stuff. They may wear sumo wrestler's drawers to diapers, he said.

The winner's prize is a three-day pass to Country Stampede, which will feature country music artists like Chris LeDoux and will be held at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Former K-State football player Doug Warren, Salina, said he plans to participate in the Chubbies contest. Warren played offensive guard from 1987-92 at 325 pounds. He said he is weighing in more around 335 now.

Warren does not have a plan as to how he will win but said he thinks participating will be a good stress reliever.

"It just sounded like fun," he said.

Judges for the event are currently being recruited from sororities, Trout said.

Trout said they are trying to put together a good finale to a good year.

"As soon as class is out, come on down and enjoy the festivities," he said.

Program Council since 1993. She is also a member of the Pre-Physical Therapy Club, the women's lacrosse team, Golden Key and Phi Kappa Phi and has coached a Manhattan Parks and Recreation basketball team.

"I was really honored to receive the award," Brink said. "I was really surprised. I didn't expect it."

Brink is the fourth recipient of the $1,000 award. The scholarship was established in 1992 to honor Winter, an ATO alumna and 1986 K-State graduate. He died in 1992, at the age of 27, after a battle with cancer.

Muir said Winter was very involved in the Union. He had been the president of UPC and a member of the UGB. Winter also won the UPC Outstanding Leadership Award in 1986.

"We are extremely proud to have the opportunity to award this scholarship in memory of Stan Winter to an outstanding student such as Emily Brink," Muir said.

"Stan loved the Union, he loved his fraternity, he loved K-State, and he loved life in general. It is very appropriate that we memorialize his life of service with this scholarship."

Explosion kills 2, injures 34 in Mexico

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — An explosion ripped apart a factory in the Mexican capital Tuesday, blowing glass and concrete for blocks and tearing away nearby roofs. The blast killed at least two and injured dozens.

Red Cross workers, firefighters and trained dogs searched for more victims among the ruins of the Puente soap and oil factory. Authorities were investigating the possibility that a gas leak caused the blast, which came without warning at midday.

"The earth shook, and there was this tremendous roar," said Enrique Ortiz, who pulled out two bloody workers as other survivors yelled for help. "They were screaming, just screaming."

The 75,000-square-foot factory was behind the San Lazaro legislative palace and about 1 1/2 miles from the Mexico City airport, which was not damaged in the blast. Some windows were shattered at the legislative palace.

Flying glass bloodied passers-by and bus passengers. Red Cross workers said they treated at least 34 people for injuries and at least 25 people were hospitalized.

Mexico City Police Chief David Garay Maldonado told a television station there were two dead. The official Notimex news agency said the victims were men found in the rubble.

It was not immediately clear what caused the explosion, although several ruptured gas tanks were visible among the debris.

The blast sent hundreds fleeing in panic and blew a 5-foot-deep crater in the ground. Parts of the factory's roof were found 400 yards away, and a steel shard was embedded in the pavement two blocks distant.

Military police in olive fatigues cordoned off the site and warned people away.

A heavy smell of gas lingered in the working-class neighborhood of factories and small concrete homes for hours as wailing ambulances rushed away.

The explosion occurred shortly after 1:15 p.m., when many employees were away at lunch, which likely reduced the casualties.

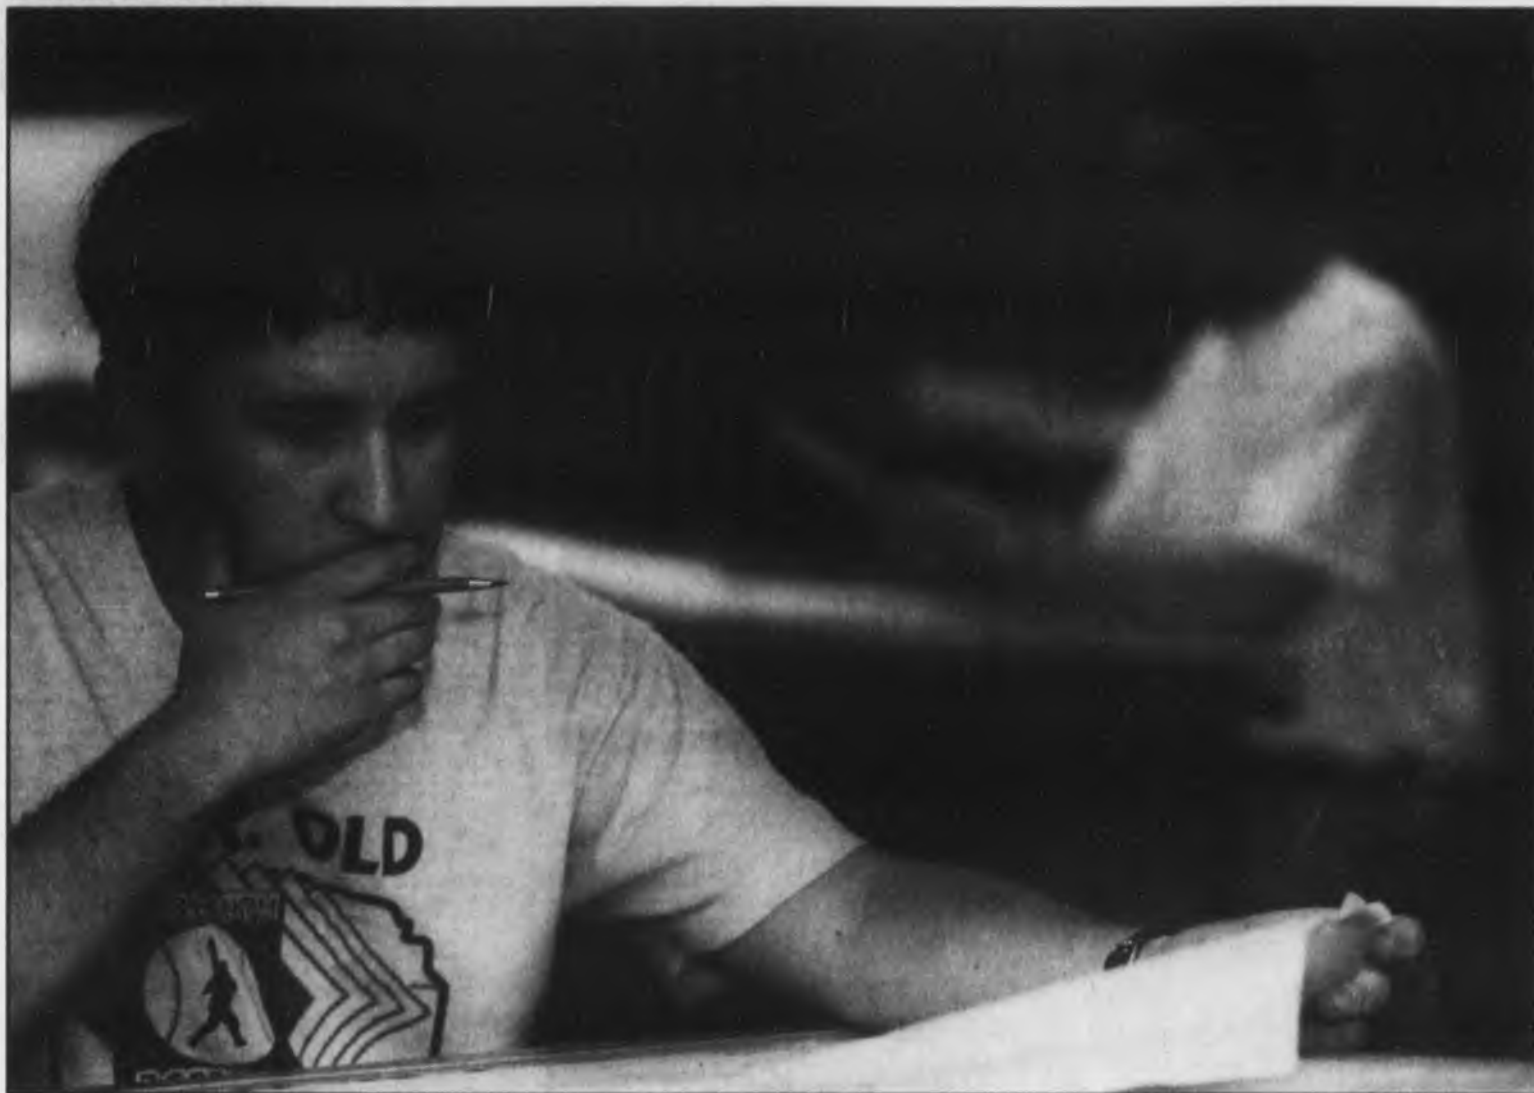

Oscar Carrillo, a 28-year-old worker in a bus factory, said he was eating lunch at his home only a few hundred yards away when the blast rocked his neighborhood.

"All the windows just blew out. The glass fell in my cauliflower soup," Carrillo said.

"It was like a whirlwind," his wife, Josefina, said. "I felt the blast, I started crying, and then I went looking for my children."

After the dust had cleared, she said, she found her 11-year-old and 6-year-old daughters and a 3-year-old son cowering in a corner of their home.

► PREGNANCY

Study supports early birth

Associated Press

CHICAGO — A normal pregnancy lasts nine months, right? When it comes to multiple births, that's not necessarily so.

A study of millions of Japanese newborns found that their chances of survival were higher when they left the womb a little sooner.

The study mirrors little-known research in the United States indicating that twins and possibly other multiple siblings do best after just 37 to 39 weeks in the womb, while babies born singly survive best after 40 weeks.

"There's no doubt that the best time for delivery of a twin is quite a bit earlier than delivery of a singleton, but whether it's exactly the same as in Japan, I'm just not sure," said John L. Kiely, chief of the Infant and Child Health Studies Branch at the National Center for Health Statistics.

Kiely reported in 1990 that 37 to 39 weeks appeared best for twins, based on 1983-85 data from New York City.

Former linebacker expelled after violating sanctions

Shana Newell and Dan Lewerenz sports editor and contributing writer

Former K-State linebacker David Damon has been expelled from the University for violating sanctions imposed for sexually assaulting a K-State student in November 1994.

Convicted of misdemeanor sexual assault, Damon's football scholarship was revoked, and the University imposed sanctions to prevent Damon from coming into contact with Amy Schulz, sophomore in family studies and human studies.

Damon chose not to comment but said he will at a later date. Schulz was unavailable for comment.

Tuesday afternoon, Damon accompanied a friend to a women's studies class in which Schulz was a student. The friend is also a student in the class.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center and the instructor of the class, said she did not immediately notice Damon's presence but became concerned when she did.

"I was deeply concerned for the emotional well-being of a female student who is enrolled in my class," Davis said.

This action violated Damon's sanctions. As a result, the Dean of Student Life Office issued a letter expelling Damon from the University.

K-State police director Ronnie Grice confirmed Wednesday evening that his department was attempting to locate Damon to deliver a letter.

"We have a letter that was given to us from the vice-president's office, associate vice-president Pat Bosco," Grice said. "I cannot discuss the contents of the letter. Right now, we are trying to contact him at the address we have."

Bosco would neither confirm nor deny such a letter existed, stating confidentiality was University policy as outlined in the Student Handbook.

Damon has until Friday to appeal the dismissal.

► FINAL EXAMS

K-State organization to provide free child-care services for finals

Gina Garvin
staff reporter

K-State students looking for someone to watch their children while studying for finals can look to the free child care service provided by Mortar Board.

"Mortar Board is providing a free child care service that will give those K-State students with children an opportunity to leave their kids at a safe and reliable place, so that they may ease some of the stress of studying for finals," said Karla Gebhardt, senior in social work and community service team chairwoman for Mortar Board.

All interested K-State students can use this service. The kids will be watched by Mortar Board members and members of several other campus organizations. The child-care service will provide various activities for the children.

"We're going to have Disney movies, coloring, board games and other types of fun games that the kids can participate in," Gebhardt said.

Refreshments will also be provided for the kids, including orange drink donated by McDonald's, Gebhardt said.

The idea for this project was given to Mortar Board by a member with a child who felt this would be a service for many students on campus, Gebhardt said.

Mortar Board was interested in this project, because it follows its two-year national service theme, which reviews children's issues.

"The child-care project follows the national service theme, as well as providing a service Mortar Board felt was very needed at K-State," Jan Wissman, Mortar Board adviser, said.

There is one stipulation for the child-care service. According to Kansas child care laws, kids can only come to the clinic a total of five hours during the week.

Free babysitting
This clinic is from 5-10 p.m., Sunday through May 16 each night in Union 207. The service is free and open to all K-State students needing this service.

Museum to open in mid-October

■ Museum program helps solicit architects to generate ideas for final design of art museum

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

Similar to the works of art it will soon house, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art has become a recognizable structure at K-State.

One cannot live and work in Manhattan without noticing its limestone and structural concrete mass rising at the foot of the southeast corner of campus.

As with most new buildings on campus, people are bound to respond.

Michael McNamara, associate professor of architecture, said he thinks the museum only partially meets the responsibilities of the museum program.

The program is a set of guidelines that were used in the design competition. Because the Beach museum is privately funded, the University had the option of soliciting architects through a design competition manner.

McNamara was one of a few faculty from the College of Architecture and Design who worked on putting the program together.

"It seems to me there is a distant relationship between K-State and the College of Architecture," McNamara said.

"We were excused from the process at the point where there was a serious difference of opinion."

"The decision was made by the vice president of finance, which he has every right to do," McNamara said. I think we should have incorporated the art and architecture faculty much more."

"The tendency is to have a closed process," McNamara said. "The process becomes as important as the product."

The screening and selection of submissions was done by a committee that included McNamara, Nelson Britt, director of the museum, then-curator Jessica Reichmond, an architect with facilities, and one other faculty member from the College of Architecture and Design.

A building committee of 14 leaders from the University and community also reviewed the submitted proposals.

The final decision of the museum's architect was decided by a review panel chaired by Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance.

Also serving on the panel were Joseph Esherick, architect with Esherick, Homsey, Davis and Dodge in San Francisco, Warren Corman, architect for the Kansas Board of Regents, and Gary Hellebust, vice president of the K-State Foundation.

McNamara said Esherick wanted a different approach for the museum design than the other members of the review panel.

"The people who knew each other wanted one approach," he said. "The concern we had was with the experience of the people."

Rawson said, "Some of the architecture faculty sat through the interviews and helped narrow the selection. We got their input."

"We have a College of Business, but the College of Business does not do our accounting," he said.

The formal program statement for the building is evolving as it is built, Rawson said.

Rawson said after the building committee chose the architect based on a proposed design, the design process began again.

"There was no stipulation the design was to be frozen," he said.

The general characteristics of the building are generally similar to the submitted proposal, Rawson said.

"It's not as large as we had hoped," he said, "but we rearranged the spaces and reduced the administrative areas."

"It's a smaller building, but a lot more efficient than it was," Rawson said.

The program includes many goals and functions of the museum and acts as a guide for the architect.

The foundation of the program is in eight design challenges. These include fitting the building into the campus, creating a landmark structure, creating a building that is an extension of the paths that surround it, creating usable open space and creating a building that enriches the campus environment.

It states such things as the need for a cafe, to protect historic trees, to salvage parking space and the creation of outdoor public space for gathering.

"Very often museums appear to be for the elites," McNamara said. "We wanted to make some sort of definable open space with the museum."

"The outdoor space in the museum is now a ramp on the northwest corner. It's not very inviting."

"The whole notion of outdoor space is not very successful. It's hidden."

One of the more striking features about the design is the large roof blanketing the largest wing of the museum. "There's nothing in it," McNamara said. "It's hard to justify."

Arthur Andersson, as principal architect of the Beach museum, is responsible for its design.

"It's kind of an attic," Andersson said. "It's gotten full with the mechanical systems."

► FEE PAYMENT

K-State adopts new payment plan for tuition

Rhonda A. Lee
staff reporter

K-State is scheduled to adopt a new tuition payment program this fall.

The program will allow students to pay tuition and fees with monthly installments instead of paying the balance in full at the beginning of the semester.

"Making monthly payments rather than the traditional payment in full at the beginning of each semester, provides students with more flexibility in paying for their college education," Keith Ratzloff, K-State controller, said.

At Ahearn Field House during the assigned payment times, students can make arrangements to sign up for billing.

"Starting this fall, students will be able to sign up for that at fee payment, they'll be able to pay a third down, and they will be billed for the other two installments that will be due Sept. 15 and Oct. 15," R. Douglas Ackley, assistant controller for K-State, said.

"The only cost to the students for doing this is a $25 fee (for) this company that we've contracted with. That is their fee for providing this service," Ackley said.

All of the billing arrangements will be handled through a national company, Academic Management Services based in East Providence, R.I.

AMS has been in business since 1970 and has helped 2 million families. It works with 15,000 colleges, Deborah Gervais, manager of customer development for AMS, said. During fee payment, three or four representatives from AMS will be on hand to assist students with payment arrangements.

Students will still be able to pay the complete balance of their tuition and fees if they desire. Ackley anticipates most students will continue to pay fees and tuition in lump sums.

► BLUEMONT ELEMENTARY

Local elementary students place 2nd in science contest

Chris Oakley
staff writer

Four Manhattan elementary students turned their inventive instincts into a $5,000 U.S. savings bond and a trip to Washington, D.C.

Bluemont Elementary school students Erin Armendariz, Jacob Herald, Jonathan Rivers and Aliyah Stephens finished second place in the Toshiba/National Teachers Association ExploraVision Awards Program.

Cynthia Garwick, the team's adviser, said the students were notified April 29 that their invention, called the Five Second Drinking Fountain, finished second place in the national competition.

"They called and said, 'We wanted to call and say congratulations. Your team is second in your age group,'" she said.

The plans for the drinking fountain include the same technology used in modern stop lights. The drinking fountain prevents long lines by using a timer to allow students only a five-second drink before shutting off.

The students developed the idea after a field trip to one of the stop lights in Manhattan, which allows the yellow light to stay on for five seconds.

The building of the new facility will have no direct effect on ticket prices.

There is no correlation of the building to ticket prices, he said. That is the function of the marketplace.

"We hope that by having a new facility and by showing a commitment to air travel and the importance that air travel plays for this area, we can entice additional commuter airlines to give Manhattan a try," Black said. "We could not have done that with the old facilities."

"The teaching at Johnson County Community College is first-rate. Summer is the perfect opportunity to take a class at JCCC," – John Thorne, Overland Park, Kan.

"I was attending a large state university when I decided to enroll in a summer class at JCCC," recalls student John Thorne. "I was back in Kansas City for the summer, and I wanted to get a class out of the way so my fall load would be lighter."

"I intended to go back to the university in the fall. But my experience at JCCC was so positive, I decided to stay and finish my first two years here.

"What sold me on JCCC was the fact that I had real instructors here, not teaching assistants and grad students."

► CITY COMMISSION

Audit finds no illegal activity

■ Auditors finish reviewing city's urban renewal program, grant

Chris Oakley & Cori Cornellison
Collegian staff

A city audit requested by some Manhattan residents found no illegal activities.

The audit, which was approved at a city commission meeting Sept. 6, 1995, investigated the city's Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund and the 1983 Community Development Block Grant activities.

In 1983, the city received a $185,000 grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development for a water-main improvement and administration.

The grant was later amended to include $169,016 generated from the program's land sales, rentals and rehabilitation loan payments. The grant was closed in 1986.

The Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund contains money from the sales of land through the urban renewal program. The fund is supposed to be spent to assist projects and services in low- to moderate-income areas in the city.

A memo from Jose R. Aguirre, district inspector general for audit to William B. Rotert, director of the Office of Community Planning and Development, states the objective of the audit was to determine whether a misuse of funds by the city occurred.

The memo said, "Our Primary objective was to determine whether the Urban Renewal and CDBG funds, and related program income, were used in accordance with HUD regulations. More specifically, because the land inventory and program income has been accounted for the city in the Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund for the past several years, our review centered around the activities of this fund."

CDBG activities were reviewed for 1983 and 1989-94 in the audit. The Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund for the years 1986-1995 were also reviewed.

The memo states because no misuse of funds were found, no further audits are planned.

Curt Wood, director of finance for the city, said the city commission could decide to conduct further audits.

He said the city commission will make this decision at a discussion session sometime in the near future.

City manager Gary Greer said in the memo he is recommending commissioners do not have any further audits conducted.

In a memo to city commissioners, Greer said the audit clears the city of any implications of misuse of funds.

"It appears that a thorough review by a neutral regulatory agency has dispelled all allegations and accusations concerning any misuse of the CDBG and Urban Renewal Funds managed by the City of Manhattan over the last decade," the memo reads.

"Additionally, it appears the information reviewed was of a nature that proper audit procedures were allowed in the process."

In the memo, Greer said the audit was a useful procedure, which provided answers to "many of the questions, rumors and innuendoes that have been made over the last year and a half. We are pleased to bring a conclusion to the issue without spending any taxpayers' money."

Some members of the South Manhattan Neighborhood Association said the money from the Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund should have been used in their neighborhood since a lot of the land sold was in the south Manhattan area.

At Tuesday's commission meeting, Delesa Rhodeman, South Manhattan Neighborhood Association member, said she was angered by the way the audit was handled.

"I'm very displeased. The neighborhood commission thought we could sit down after the report came out with the commissioners and discuss it," she said.

Rhodeman said the audit did not answer any of the concerns the neighborhood organization had.

"I'll walk away from here tonight asking the same questions I asked a year ago," she said.

"Maybe the next time a group of citizens comes out with concerns you will sit down and discuss their concerns with them."

Drop off the kids; go take your finals

QUICKread

► Mortar Board should be commended for serving those students who have children by offering free child care during finals week.

In keeping with its two-year national service theme of reviewing children's issues, Mortar Board will be helping students with children by providing free child care during finals.

This provides a much-needed service to families. The child care will be conveniently in the K-State Student Union room 207, allowing virtually all students who have children a legitimate chance to concentrate on studying while someone else concentrates on watching their kids.

Parents can feel comfortable leaving their kids while they study, because Mortar Board will not only watch their kids but provide educational activities and refreshments.

Under Kansas law, children can only stay at the care center for a total of five hours during the week, but these five hours of worry-free studying could be crucial to final grades for a segment of society that deserves the support of the academic community and the community as a whole.

Students with children are no doubt a minority group on campus, and their concerns are often overlooked.

Child care is often expensive, and good providers are sometimes hard to find.

For students who already have a heavy burden to bare during finals, the added stress of finding adequate child care could easily have a negative effect on test performance.

This service should not be a one-time philanthropy project, but a service that should be offered every semester.

Mortar Board should be commended for its efforts and for staying true to its commitment of addressing children's issues.

TOLES

An end to campus rumors

Well kids, this is it. Last column, one more day of classes. We are into the home stretch. I am happy to announce this is my last semester as a columnist. I have bigger fish to fry and less time to do it in, so something had to give. I will be devoting my time to the Electronic Collegian and making the world a better, safer place for restaurant workers everywhere.

This is your last chance to reap my accumulated knowledge from my vast experience as a Collegian columnist. I will try to dispel a few rumors that have been floating around and generally give you a little life advice you might not get in the classroom. This is also my last chance to offend everybody on the planet (not that I would do that on purpose, of course).

Here we go.

1. The rumor that if your roommate dies, you get a 4.0 GPA is not true. If a faculty member dies, you get a day off if you were in that class, and if President Jon Wefald dies, we all get promotions, but there is no GPA involved.

2. Russell Fortmeyer is not a paid minion of the squirrel cartel. I asked him, and he denied it, so it must be true.

3. Remember this little rhyme, and you will have less intense hangovers, I promise.

Beer on whiskey, mighty risky.
Whiskey on beer, in the clear.

I tested this on my friend Meg, and it is true, so write it on your best drinking buddy's forehead and have a good night.

4. The rumor that William Thomas Burdette is leaving in a snit is true. (He claims he is leaving of his own free will. I suspect he is being run out on a rail.) Be sure to wave at him on his way out of town. We will miss his effervescent sense of humor.

5. Miss America is chosen for her brains, which is why the swimsuit competition is so crucial. (Yeah, and the Jaggerettes had to write an essay.) I am not making this up.

6. This is just an observation: Have you noticed that lately all the columnists who try to write humor eventually end up doing their best Dave Barry imitation? How weird.

7. How come all the bars have Ladies Night, but none of them have Men's Night? If I were a guy, I would be demanding equal treatment.

8. Scott Allen Miller identified with Howard Stern as a male role model growing up. I heard a lot of pieces fall into place when he told me that; how about you?

9. I suggest that everyone apply to be a columnist at least once. It is the toughest job that will ever haunt you.

Intellectuals wanted

I am looking for a few good men or women to write my column for me when I am gone.

After my first column, many readers suggested I should go to Lawrence or hell. Well, after careful consideration, I have decided to compromise and go to the Dallas/Fort Worth area instead. It is hot as hell, and the music scene is better.

Yes, I am transferring. Consequently, I will no longer be able to provide the Collegian with my services. So this is a plea for someone to take my place as the resident moderate, conservative, God-fearing intellectual on the paper.

If you do not step in, loyal readers, and lift high the torch of the moderate truth, the voice of K-State is bound to be overrun by liberals, gays, communists, feminists, Unabombers, atheists, Fred Phelps followers, stone-age prison reformers, elitists, NRA-gun-wielding-David-Koresh-worshipping wackos, pissed-off local band members, Satan worshipers, budding politicians, criminals, drunks, sex fiends, Bible-beating fundamentalists, dope smokers, used-car salesmen, Barney and Big Bird.

All those people have a voice in the community and thank goodness for that. After all, it is diversity that makes the world interesting and gives me something to write about every week.

However, most people just sort of fall in between the radicals somewhere. Well, you do not have to go unheard. I know there is still a person or two who is just kind of in the middle of it all, observing and making intelligent and witty commentary on life and its quirks. You might be that person.

If you think you are that person, let your voice be heard. Do not let the voice of the intelligent majority be drowned out by a bunch of extremists who do not know anything about the real world.

The Collegian is still looking for columnists, so you are not too late. The job is not that hard, you get paid, and you get to see a great photo of yourself once a week.

At the very least, continue to write letters to the editor and your congressperson. Join interest groups or anything, but do not just sit around at the bars and stagnate. If there is something you do not like about the way things work, change it.

Ordinary folks like you and me are able to make our opinions heard. That is the wonderful thing about having a free press.

Until then, here is my parting two cents. (Actually, with the cost of newsprint skyrocketing, it is probably more like five cents, but who is keeping track?) There are a few people who I have heard just about enough of, and I would love it if they would shut up and give everyone else a turn.

1. Howard Stern — Two words: Shock value. If this guy ever had anything intelligent to say, people would be so busy waiting for the racist or sexist comment that would no doubt follow, they would not even hear it. The only reason this guy is so popular is there are a

WILLIAM THOMAS
Burdette

I WANT

bunch of people out there who are too lazy to think for themselves.

2. Rush Limbaugh — Who died and left this guy all the answers? OK, so he seemed sort of smart at first. That is, until most of us began to realize that most of Limbaugh's statistics about the liberal sector of the community were probably about as accurate as the average meteorologist's. The only reason he is so popular is there are a bunch of people out there who are too lazy to think for themselves.

3. Barbara Walters — Who died and left this woman all the questions? I mean, good interviewing is one thing, but this woman is just plain nosy. I suppose if she had a life of her own, she would not have to pry into other people's so much.

4. Beavis and Butt-head — Wait, never mind. I will never get sick of them.

5. Newt Gingrich — Frankly, I do not frankly care, if he frankly got a book deal or not. Frankly, I would not read it because frankly, I just have frankly heard enough about his Contract with America.

6. Bill Gates — He is a computer geek.

That is it. There is a lot to be said for the information revolution, but has this guy ever heard of interpersonal skills? I have enough of a problem sitting at a computer long enough to finish my column. The last thing I want is to let one run my life.

7. MTV — Does it bother anyone else that this is the force shaping our generation?

8. Scott Allen Miller — Yeah, Scott, I am sick of you and your home page, your Scott Miller society, your column and Smatterings, your voice impressions, and your P.I.S.S. and your W.O.W. Here is an acronym for you — B.Y.O.B. (Boy, You're an Obnoxious Butt-head). Take it easy, Scott. I am only kidding.

9. Coolio — 1,2,3,4, get this rapper off the floor. I would like a little sumpin' new.

10. Deion Sanders — Any guy who gives himself, not one, but two nicknames does not deserve to be on prime time. I would like to see "Neon Deion" fade back into the dark.

CONTRIBUTING TO THE DEBT

Editor,

Upon graduation, we will all get to find employment.

Then, all out of our earnings, we will get to help pay taxes for all of the wonderful services that we insist on the government providing for us. According to KTKA-TV, as of May 7, every American man, woman and child owes the federal debt more than $19,224 each.

If you plan to get married and have two kids, that means you need to "contribute" $76,000. The national debt grew more than $1 trillion in the last 11 months to the current level of more than $5,090,257,303,000. Look at all of those digits in a trillion.

Look at the bright side: If you pay only $100 per month more in taxes, you and your family will have your share paid off in only 60 years. On the other hand, considering the debt reached its first trillion in the mid-1980s and gained a whole trillion in just the past 11 months, the interest is obviously compounding exponentially. Consequently, we'll have to pay another

$300 per month just to pay your share of the interest by age 80. (Ever wonder who's pocketing all the interest?)

If you or I overcharge our credit card what happens to us? Creditors come calling. Our possessions are repossessed. Our credit certainly won't be extended. What do you think will happen when the U.S. government files for bankruptcy and loses all of its assets in an attempt to pay off its creditors?

If we continue to insist that we deserve government programs to help our non-self-accountable, non-self-reliant behinds, in the not-so-distant future, the 1930s might look like a picnic. I recall that crash culminated in some dictators taking advantage of the economic fall, which in turn resulted in World War II.

When you go to the polls to vote this November, you might remember this as you vote for that candidate who promises you more "services" in exchange for your vote. We are slicing our own proverbial throats by digging a national debt grave.

THANKS TO ALL THOSE WHO HELPED MY EDUCATION

Editor,
As I am quickly approaching the end of my last semester at K-State, I would like to take this opportunity to thank those extraordinary individuals whose efforts have had a significant effect on the quality of my education.

I think sometimes our instructors do not realize the effect they can have on those of us who honestly appreciate their desire to convey their knowledge.

With this, I would like to pen an open letter of appreciation to all of my former and current teachers who have influenced my time here.

More specifically to Bernard Franklin, who taught me that leadership is not about popularity, it is about making tough, ethical decisions and blazing a trail for others to follow; to Sue Zschoche, who taught me history is about people and events that shape the world in which we live; to Ted Barkley, who showed me true knowledge comes from observation and experience; to Dennis Law, who is living proof that the enthusiasm of one can overcome the apathy of many; to Alan Knapp, who introduced me to the path of least resistance; to John Blair, who is the paradigm of teaching excellence; and finally to Jack Hayes, Jayne Thompson and everyone at Flint Hills Aikikai, for demonstrating greatness of human spirit.

To these and many others too numerous to mention, I would like to say thank you.

It's been said that on the road of life, we have no friends, only teachers. For what it's worth, I consider you all to be friends and teachers. Your outstanding quality has shaped my mind, and you have forever changed the world through the eyes of an individual. God bless and farewell! You will be remembered fondly.

COLUMNIST KNOWS LITTLE ABOUT ROWING

Editor,
This letter is in response to Shane McCormick's opinion of the sport of rowing in Tuesday's Collegian. McCormick, let me enlighten your ignorant little world and inform you about the world's most prestigious sport.

I know you didn't intentionally bash the country's oldest collegiate sport. You just suffer from a lack of knowledge, and therefore respect, of rowing. I have rowed on the KSU Crew for more than five years, and I assure you that rowing is anything but a pathetic sport. It takes an incredible amount of concentration, skill and teamwork for eight people to row together in a boat that is more than 50 feet long, only two feet wide and one-eighth of an inch thick!

Rowing might not be the most popular or well-known sport in America, but it deserves as much, if not more appreciation and respect. McCormick, you complained when the world's four most prestigious rowing universities (Oxford, Cambridge, Harvard and Yale) were occupying the television waves instead of football. I guess you will be complaining again when rowing is televised during the Olympics —football won't be. By the way, do those schools even have football teams?

I know this letter has probably failed to change your misguided feelings about rowing, so I challenge you to a race. Just come out to the boathouse any time, and I will treat you to the humbling feeling of getting your ass kicked in a single, which measures 27 feet long and nine inches wide. Maybe then you will give the sport of rowing the attention and respect it deserves.

Bring a professional football player with you. I'll beat him, too.

DIFFERENCES EXIST WITH FEMALE, MALE CASTRATION

Editor,
I am writing in response to Scott Allen Miller's column on female genital mutilation in the May 3 Collegian. Although it was a thoughtful and well-written account of the young lady who has recently received asylum here in the United States and an interesting idea about male circumcision in this country, I still have a rather large problem with the whole thing. What Miller left out of his account is perhaps the most delicate part of the subject of female genital mutilation.

When a male is circumcised, only the foreskin of the penis is removed. I have it on good authority that this does not affect his sexual pleasure later on in his life.

Female genital mutilation consists of removing the clitoris, usually. This greatly reduces a woman's potential for sexual pleasure.

In the most extreme cases, the labia are stitched together to make it completely impossible for the woman to engage in sexual intercourse. It is an issue of men controlling women's sexuality in the most brutal and absolute of terms.

The issue of stopping genital mutilation applies to young men as well. In some countries, the culture dictates circumcision is a rite of passage between childhood and adulthood. At the age of 12 or so, the procedure is performed on the children without anesthetic.

The instruments used are unsafe, and quite a few children die as a result of the procedure.

The United States should be concerned about this custom, as a country dedicated to human rights the world over.

We need to set aside our prudishness to support the efforts of people like Fauziya Kasinga, who are brave enough to stand up and assert that what is happening to them is wrong.

SPORTS PAGE SHOULD HAVE COVERED RELAY RESULTS

Editor,

Where have all the sports writers gone? As a member of the K-State track and field team, I've been waiting eagerly all week for the Drake Relays results. You might wonder why I've been waiting to see the write-up in the paper. The simple fact of the matter is I am a 1996 Drake Relays champion along with three other women, one of whom is also a Drake champion in the women's high jump.

Imagine my outrage when, after a week of spring football coverage and David Damon, the track team finally gets some space concerning our meet this weekend and no separate article containing the Drake results. Imagine my further outrage when the men's results for the Relays were given at the end of the Invitational article without any women's results!

Just to give people some idea of how important the Drake Relays are, the Drake University campus has a week-long festival leading up to the meet. Tickets to get in to the meet are $20, and it's always sold out. You can see ticket scalpers lining the streets just like at football games.

Olympic-caliber athletes compete at this meet. I got to see Michael Johnson run the fastest 400-meter time in the world so far for this year. Wanita Dykstra of K-State placed first in the women's high jump.

The K-State women's 4x100-meter shuttle-hurdle relay also placed first beating last year's winning team, Eastern Michigan. The members of that team were, in the order we ran, Angela Showalter, Jennifer Gruver, Vanitta Kenard and Wanita Dykstra.

Why were we ignored?

Vaughn's decision commendable

Regardless of your feelings toward Jayhawk basketball, you have to admire Jacques Vaughn.

With an announcement at a press conference Monday, Vaughn opened himself up to second-guessing.

He passed up what appeared to be the safest bet for securing his financial future and instead took the road that will certainly be questioned by many people in all walks of life, perhaps even education.

Vaughn said he would stay in school. That's right.

By staying in school for his senior year, the Kansas point guard took what he referred to as "a road less traveled."

And it is a road many people will likely criticize.

You see, after three years of college, Vaughn had an opportunity to take the skills he learned in one area and turn them into dollars.

By not entering the National Basketball Association draft after his junior year, Vaughn opens himself up to the possibility of serious injury or a poor senior season, either of which could keep him from entering the NBA.

Yet Vaughn chose to stay in school. By doing this, he opens himself up to second-guessing from media and fans across the nation.

Even his coach, Roy Williams, said Vaughn would face more pressure by staying at KU than by turning pro.

That is said.

There should not be added pressure on college athletes when they are competing at a college level. College athletics should be the last time an athlete gets to compete for the fun of competition and not to support himself. College athletics should be a time to compete for one's school without the pressure of professional sports.

While college athletics should be competitive, the excitement of the college sports atmosphere should be paramount.

Of course, college athletics are not, and never will be, like that.

As long as college athletics means added pressure, it only makes sense that college athletics would forego the pressure and non-payment of college athletics for the high-salary, glamorous world of professional sports.

The money facing these top college athletes, if they turn pro, is hard to turn down. If the New York Times came to me tomorrow and offered me a $70,000 job covering the Knicks, I would probably jump at the chance.

The opportunity to do what I want to do for a living before I graduate from college would be too much to turn down, even if I knew it would not be a long-term position.

In that situation, I would be able to put money aside to continue my college education in the future if that were the path I chose.

Financially, it would only make sense for me to take that position.

Having said that, taking a high-profile position as an athlete or even a journalist might not be the best thing for people in their early 20s.

For athletes who turn pro straight from high school, which appears to be a growing trend, it certainly is not the best choice.

It takes a certain level of experience and maturity to handle the pressures of making the big money.

An 18-year-old who has never lived away from home is probably not prepared for the high stakes life in the NBA.

As long as the system stays as it is and athletes can declare themselves eligible for the draft at any point, and college athletes who do not turn pro face intense scrutiny, the trend of bypassing one or more years of college will continue.

I do not know what the answer is. Certainly the system used in hockey, which has traditionally featured 18-year-olds being drafted by NHL teams, is no better.

The system used in football is similar to that used in basketball, but the increased physical strength needed for the NFL seems to counteract the notion of athletes turning pro.

Maybe the answer is to have a minimum age. Maybe the answer is to pay college athletes.

Maybe there is no answer.

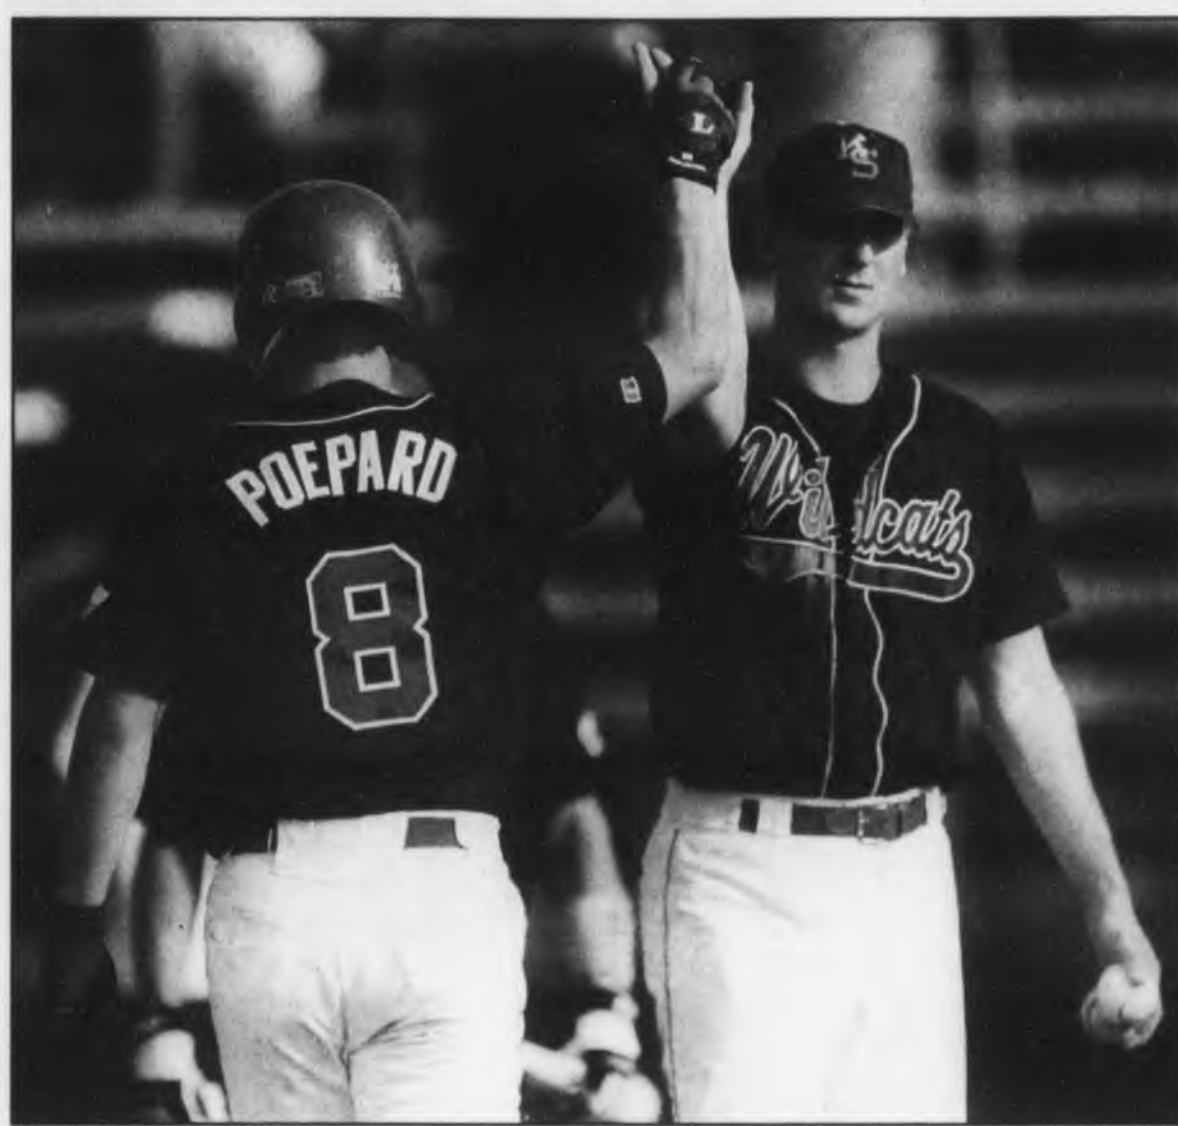

One thing is certain — as long as college basketball stars are encouraged to turn pro, the NBA's "Stay in School" campaign will not carry much weight.

Second baseman Scott Poepard gets a high-five from David Hendrix after hitting his ninth home run this season during the second game of a doubleheader against Oral Roberts Wednesday afternoon.

Wildcats win last home game

John Berggren
staff writer

Pitching once again told the story as the K-State baseball team split a doubleheader with Oral Roberts University Wednesday. The Wildcats dropped the opening game of the final homestand with a score of 9-6 but battled back to win the second game, 14-12.

The second game started sloppily for the Cats as senior Jake Voos made his first start of his collegiate career but couldn't get out of the first inning.

Voos lasted two-thirds of the first inning giving up one hit, four hit batsmen and three walks, setting the Cats behind after the first frame 6-0. Kevin Wicker came on to get the final out in the inning.

The Cats battled back in the bottom half of the next three innings — scoring 11 runs on 11 hits and two errors.

The Golden Eagles came back in their half of the fourth to score two more runs on two hits and two errors.

K-State scored again in the fifth inning on a Dave Hendrix single with runners on second and third, giving the Cats a 13-8 advantage.

ORU rallied for three runs in the top of the seventh. Brian Thompson started the inning in relief for Wicker and could only record one out giving up three runs on three hits and two walks.

Mickey Blount came on to record strikeouts for the last two outs of the inning.

ORU again fought back in the top of the eighth to score one

In the second game of Wednesday's doubleheader, senior pitcher Jake Voos made the first start in his K-State career.

His last home game of his four-year tour was a rocky one for the career reliever turned starter for the game.

Voos came into the game with no record and no ERA only pitching 1-2/3 innings this season before the start.

Voos, a Manhattan High School graduate, said he knew ahead of time he was going to open the game.

"I found out a week before the game," Voos said. "I hadn't made a start since I was a senior in high school. It was kind of weird because I hadn't even seen a batter this season Voos showed his rust, hitting four batters, walking three and giving up six runs in his long two-thirds of an inning.

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said he wanted to let Voos pitch an inning.

"Jake gave us his best," Clark said. "He deserved the start, but I wish we could have got him the first inning."

Voos said everything was fine in the bullpen before the game.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

New faces join team

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

K-State women's basketball coach Debbie Patterson made the first steps toward completing her coaching staff Wednesday, hiring Kamie Ethridge as associate coach and Bridgett Williams as assistant coach.

"We've brought in a staff capable of putting this program at the highest level of competition," Patterson said.

Ethridge spent the last four years with Patterson as the second assistant coach at Vanderbilt after serving as an assistant coach at Texas and Northern Illinois.

"Kamie brings a lot of experience in every phase of running the perimeter," Patterson said. "She has extensive experience in recruiting and scheduling, and she's a great teacher of the game."

Ethridge played guard at Texas, graduating in 1986 after sweeping the Wade Trophy, Naismith Award and Broderick Cup.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

K-State coach leads board

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

Tom Asbury might be top dog in the Wildcat men's basketball program, but on the national scene, Asbury assistant Bob Hanson is the leader of the pack.

Hanson, who came to K-State in 1994 as Asbury's director of basketball operations before being promoted to assistant coach last year, is serving as president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

"We're an organization of coaches at all levels of the game from high school through college and some professional coaches," Hanson said.

Hanson was elected to the NABC board of directors in 1988 when he was the coach at the University of Nebraska-Omaha.

Fifteen coaches serve on the board, with each taking a turn as president.

Hanson

"Ideally each person serves as president in their 14th year, then as the departing president the year after that," Hanson said.

"But some coaches quit, others lose their jobs, and some go into private business."

Although it is made up entirely of basketball coaches, the NABC involves itself in both on- and off-court activities.

"We try to have an influence on what rules are adopted. We try to have an influence on the people that make the rules, who tend to be athletic directors," Hanson said.

"But we also try to be proactive in promoting coaching away from the game. Our Coaches Against Cancer campaign raised more than $1,000,000 for the American Cancer Society last year. That was started by Norm Stewart at Missouri."

Hanson is only the second assistant coach to serve as president of NABC, but he is not the first K-Stater. Former Wildcat coaches Jack Gardner and Jack Hartman each served as president, Tex Winter served on the board of directors and Lon Kruger is on the board.

OLYMPICS

Cats endeavor for chance in Games

Darren Whitley
staff reporter

The Atlanta Olympic games will not be the biggest test for several current and former K-State track athletes. Getting there may be.

The hardest and most stressful days are during the Olympic trials June 14-23 in Atlanta, Ga. Wentland, high jumper, said.

"If I really stink up the place today, I am not coming back tomorrow," Wentland said of the first day's importance.

How well athletes deals with the stress might be to their benefit or doom.

"I have just had to say to myself, 'It is just another meet. It is just another meet,' and try to put the whole fact that it carries this weight with it. Gosh, you know, I could be doing Pert commercials tomorrow," Wentland said.

Wentland said she is going to fight off the stress with confidence and belief that she will succeed, because she has been training for more than four years.

The U.S. team is based on who does well at the Olympic trials in the United States. American athletes cannot qualify for the team based on previous meets, Nicole Green, sprinter, said.

"It is just a one-weekend thing," Green said.

Green is ranked fifth in the nation with her personal record of 51.93 seconds in the 400-meter dash. She should be ready for the Olympic trials because she is familiar with competition, both national and international. She was on the U.S. World Championships national team and helped win the gold in the 4X400-meter relay last year.

Green said it is likely she will be on the U.S. Olympic team as a member of the 4X400-meter relay by finishing in the top five during the Olympic trials.

She said is not counting her chickens before they hatch, though.

"Do not look forward to where you are going to be at, because it is never promising that you are going," she said of her personal philosophy.

Green said she feels she benefits from being around other Olympic-caliber athletes.

"It is good to have Olympic-caliber athletes around you, because they keep you in balance," she said.

Green chose to stay in Manhattan to stay close her coach and discipline. Seeing other athletes like Wentland, Steve Fritz, Kirsten Schultz, Itai Margalit and Wanita Dykstra stay focused on their dreams helps, she said.

Because she comes to the track to practice regularly, she serves as a leader to the athletes still competing for K-State, she said.

Dykstra is also a high jumper, but she will not compete with Wentland for a spot on the U.S. Olympic team because she is from St. Catharines, Ontario, Canada.

Dykstra must jump one centimeter higher than her personal record sometime before the Canadian trials, and she will qualify for the Canadian national team. She has to meet the A Standard of Canada to compete in the Olympics for her country.

In 1992, she won the Canadian Olympic trials but failed to make the A Standard, which is 192 centimeters or 6 feet, 3-1/2 inches.

Dykstra has promised herself since 1992 she would do something special if she makes the team.

"If I make the team, I am going to get a tattoo on my ankle. My mom is going to kill me, but I think I will take my chances," Dykstra said.

K-State's track team duals Nebraska from 1 to 6 p.m. today at R.V. Christian Track.

Cancer possibly caused by smoke

Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. — The tumor that has sidelined Los Angeles Dodgers outfielder Brett Butler might have been caused by secondhand exposure to cigarette smoke, the surgeon who removed a cancerous tonsil from Butler's throat said Wednesday.

"The biggest risk (for this type of cancer) is some exposure to nicotine products," said Dr. Robert Gadlage, an ear, nose and throat specialist.

Gadlage downplayed the significance of Butler's use of chewing tobacco in his early days as a player. He said both of Butler's parents smoked, so Butler was exposed to secondhand smoke consistently as a child.

"We can see someone who smokes two packs a day, three packs a day for 50 years who never gets this. Then there's somebody with minimal exposure like Brett," Gadlage told a news conference.

Butler, 38, was placed on the disabled list May 2 to have a tonsillectomy at Eastside Medical Center in Snellville, near his home in Duluth. His tonsils were removed Friday, and lab tests Tuesday confirmed cancer in the right tonsil.

Gadlage said Dr. William Grist, director of the Head and Neck Cancer Surgery Department at Emory University in Atlanta, believes there still is some cancer in Butler's neck. An abnormal lymph node will be removed on May 21. Two weeks later Butler will start six weeks of radiation treatments.

"In Dr. Grist's opinion, there is still some cancer around that tonsil, and we have to assume that's what's causing the one lymph node he still has to stay enlarged," Gadlage said.

Gadlage said Grist "didn't say anything about (Butler's) career being over. He did say it wouldn't be wise for him to try to go back this year."

He said the national recovery rate for this type of cancer is close to 70 percent, but you have to add at least a few percentage points for Butler because he is in such good physical condition.

Lowery Robinson, a close friend of Butler, said the center fielder is in severe pain but ready to fight.

"He's handling it pretty good," Robinson said. "Brett has the makeup to beat it. His faith will see him through."

Gadlage, also a close friend of Butler, said Butler came to him just before spring training because of a sore throat and swollen neck.

The diagnosis was tonsillitis, and Gadlage prescribed antibiotics.

The problem did not clear up, so Gadlage again examined him at the Dodgers' training camp in Vero Beach, Fla., and prescribed a new series of antibiotics and antifungal medications.

Gadlage said he told Butler the tonsils would have to come out whenever Butler was ready.

Butler called Gadlage last week, and they scheduled the surgery after meeting with Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda, Gadlage said.

An examination of Butler's throat immediately before surgery showed the tonsil had grown to three or four times its normal size and was the size of a plum.

The operation took about 75 minutes.

When Butler came out of the anesthesia and was told it was a tumor, he was shocked and his family was shocked, Gadlage said.

But he approached this the way he approached the rest of his life. He wants to know everything there is to know about it and then get on with it, Gadlage said.

We can see someone who smokes two packs a day, three packs a day for 50 years who never gets this. Then there's somebody with minimal exposure like Brett.

Pregnant pitcher wants to continue playing softball

Associated Press

WATERFORD, Conn. — When Bob and Laure Schlink's teen-age daughter told them she was pregnant, they had a tough choice to make.

The decision involved their daughter Kim Schlink's delivery — from the pitcher's mound.

It was early March, and Kim Schlink, a 17-year-old junior at the Southeast Regional Vocational-Technical School, was five months pregnant and starting to show. But she was the star pitcher on her school team and determined to play.

"Kim's a great softball pitcher, and she wanted to play even though she's pregnant," Laure Schlink said this week. "Sure, she made a mistake, but she's a good kid and she's been pitching since she was 8 years old."

The Schlinks consulted with school officials and found there is no prohibition against pregnant athletes providing they are academically eligible and have a doctor's permission. Not everyone is happy about her playing, including some of her teammates.

The family doctor was skeptical at first but came around after being told that Kim Schlink trains year-round, her mother said. Kim Schlink and her mother also went to a New London obstetrics and gynecology clinic, where all three physicians cleared the teen-ager to play.

So, with a one-inch pad strapped around her middle, Kim Schlink took the mound. She was not allowed to bat or cover home plate, but she started every game during the first month of the season.

In the first eight games, Kim Schlink had a 5-3 record with 80 strikeouts.

The controversy began two weeks ago, when the vocational school at Danielson refused to take the field against Kim Schlink and forfeited the game.

► BIG 8 COMMISSIONER RECEIVES AWARD

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Big 8 commissioner Carl James has been given the top award of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics.

James, the league's commissioner since 1980, is recipient of the 30th James J. Corbett Memorial Award. The award was announced Wednesday.

Corbett was athletic director at Louisiana State and the first president of NACDA when it was formed in 1965. The award is considered the highest honor the organization can bestow.

James plans to go into semi-retirement and serve as a consultant to the newly formed Big 12 when the Big 8 merges with former Southwest Conference schools Texas, Texas Tech, Texas A&M and Baylor.

more run, making the score 12-13. David Johnson came on in with two outs in the inning to record a strikeout and preserve the win.

K-State Coach Mike Clark said the high scoring contest was due to good hitting more than bad pitching.

"I thought we had good hitting for the lack of practice we've seen outdoors in the last week," Clark said. "We haven't been outside since the Iowa State game last Wednesday. The only practice we've seen has been indoors, and all we get to hit indoors are fastballs."

In the first game, senior Matt

Koeman went seven innings, giving up eight hits and 11 runs with six strikeouts. Only five of Koeman's runs were earned.

The game remained scoreless through the first three innings until Jeremy Starkweather scored on a passed ball and Brian Dinsmore added an RBI single.

ORU added five more runs in the fifth sparked by a Starkweather grand slam. The Eagles added two more runs in the top of the seventh.

With the score 9-0, the Cats finally got on the board in the bottom half of the ninth inning with six runs. Four of the runs were scored on a Schesser grand slam, the first of his K-State career.

Schesser said he came to the plate just hoping to get a hit.

"When I went up, their pitcher was showing us nothing but fast balls," Schesser said. "I was in a situation with base runners, and I just got a good pitch to hit."

Clark said the six-run ninth inning spring-boarded the Cats into game two of the series.

"The ninth really carried us into the second game," Clark said. "Our hitters finally got their timing down."

Clark said splitting the series with ORU didn't bother him as much as might be expected.

"Our whole philosophy this week has been to work on getting ready for the Big 8 Tournament," Clark said. "Everything we do points to Oklahoma City."

Both Ethridge and Williams come from highly competitive programs, and both aspire to hold head coaching positions. But Patterson said she is not afraid of losing her assistants.

"I think it's a positive," she said. "They bring a level of experience and expertise to this program we need to take it to the next level. If we hired fresh assistants, it might take us three or four years longer to reach our goals."

Patterson still has one coaching position to fill and said she hopes to do that in the next month.

ing with post players and coordinating recruiting and academics. She was a Kodak District V All-American at Southern Illinois. She also served as an assistant at SIU from 1992-1994.

"Bridgett has communication skills, organizational skills and coaching experience in the post game," Patterson said. "In her years as an assistant, she has established herself as one of the game's most sought-after coaches. Bridgett's interpersonal and organizational skills, as well as her proficiency as a teacher, are highly regarded across the game."

REVIEW

'Cheetah' mixes sweet blends, southern blues

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

You'll realize there is no better name for the Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies after you listen to "Magnolia."

The name perfectly describes the Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies, who introduce their songs with soft rhythms blending sweetly into southern blues and rock 'n' roll.

The music is similar to the Black Crowes' first album, but there is something more enjoyable in lead singer Michael Farris' voice.

Farris creates a hypnotizing soulful sound somewhere between Bob Seger and Joe Cocker.

The Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies seem content to produce a typical rock sound while expressing more originality in their lyrics.

The lyrics on many tracks from "Magnolia" should appeal to those with a background in interpreting poetry.

On the opening track, "Backwoods Travelin'," Farris belts the lines, "At least I see my zenith/I see it growin' on the vine/Here in my swamp of Eden/It ripens even when my heart is blind," which is hard to interpret in the context of the song.

"Cool is the rocking horse soldier/I used to like myself/Captured by a mold/It's got a hold on its soul/I look inside my carousel," from "Messenger's Lament," is another example of lyrics that force the listener into deep thought.

Still, the music on "Magnolia" and Farris' voice make the songs compelling.

While the songs on "Magnolia" contain common rock themes of love, family and friendship, interesting lyrics throughout the album force the listener to go beyond the surface of the words and find the true feeling the band is trying to convey.

The mixture of harmonica, heavy guitars and the conviction of Farris' voice make "Magnolia" an enjoyable collection of music.

Most tracks contain a fast-paced delivery, but the Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies are capable of a slower, more captivating sound.

"Father Speaks" is an example of the band's versatility as the song moves from slow, dramatic overtones to fast, hard-hitting riffs.

A lighter side of the Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies is evident on "I Found Love," containing delightful heavy bass lines and a less serious tone.

The tracks "Magnolia" and "Good Time" are well suited for radio and stand alone as the best songs on the compact disc.

Atlantic Recording Company took a chance in producing the CD, and the Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies took a chance trying to find an audience in a generation of popular radio dominated by alternative music.

Inspiration for the band's sound could easily be tied to a mixture of the Allman Brothers, Wilson Pickett and the Rolling Stones, so "Magnolia" will no doubt appeal to an older audience with an appreciation of the sounds that established modern rock.

Internet goes to small towns

Staff reporter

Collegian

The dusty roads of small towns seem a million miles away from the fast-paced information superhighway.

But people in Kansas towns like St. Mary's and Wamego have already climbed onto the superhighway bandwagon.

The people of St. Mary's received local access to the Internet Wednesday with the help of St. Mary's resident Jim Jones.

Jones said he had 20 people sign up before St. Mary's was officially online, and he hoped to have about 60.

"Probably the people who will use it the most will be families out of town," Jones said.

Those people will probably use it for e-mail, he said.

"We have a few kids, college students, teachers and some business people," Jones said.

Jones said he hopes the Internet brings the community closer together.

"I can't say right now, but I guess that it would bring the community closer together, maybe bring the community up to date," Jones said.

Jones said he would like to create a homepage for St. Mary's also.

Wamego has had local access to the Internet since Nov. 21, 1995.

Ray Hoogendorn of Wamego Computers said there are about 100 people who have subscribed to the Internet service in Wamego, and that number is changing all the time.

Hoogendorn said most people in Wamego do not know about local access to the Internet.

"Most people don't know about it, and they hook up to find out about it. It's all new to them," Hoogendorn said.

Hoogendorn said a few people who try the Internet don't like it.

"We have a few that find out that they don't want it and get off," Hoogendorn said.

Overall, Hoogendorn said, most people like it.

All kinds of people get on the Internet, he said.

"The whole gamut, everybody — teen-agers, senior citizens, male or female, just about everyone you run into," Hoogendorn said.

Hoogendorn said some people from Wamego who are on the Internet have never used a computer.

"There's some people who've never had a computer before and got one because of the Internet," Hoogendorn said. "We've got anywhere from amateur to people who are very knowledgeable about computers."

Hoogendorn said Wamego will have a homepage on the Internet sometime soon.

"I'm getting ready to put a homepage for the city of Wamego," Hoogendorn said. "I'm just trying to advertise Wamego and put it on the Internet map."

THEATER

Show benefits AIDS research

Brent Smitko

staff reporter

Looking for a way to get your mind off finals?

Then check out K-State's version of "Saturday Night Live" when "Live Stuff" comes to Nichols Theatre at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

The annual improvisation-based comedy show has been done for the past four years and all the benefits from the show go to the Manhattan AIDS Project.

Deidre Ens, graduate student in theater and director of the show, said the event began when a group of students involved with K-State Theatre decided to do something to benefit AIDS research.

"The first year money went to the Topeka AIDS Project," Ens said. "It's important because so many people within the theater community have been affected by this disease."

The 25 skits being performed were developed by the cast and deal with current issues and some political satire.

"The entire cast really contributes and develops ideas," Ens said. "We got together and spent a lot of time just brainstorming."

Some of the topics the group came up with include the Unabomber, blind dates, a satire of MTV's "The Real World" and also appearances by Jan Brady and Elvis, Ens said.

Every year the show offers something different, she said.

"This can give students a little break from studying," she said.

Tickets for the show are $5 and all the money will go to the Manhattan AIDS Project.

Besides the obvious connection with other buildings with the use of limestone on the exterior, the Beach museum's design reflects past architectural trends prevalent in some campus buildings.

McNamara said the building design says nothing about the future or the present.

"It mimics some of the old buildings on campus, but it says nothing about our current environment," he said. "In my view, it denies the present."

"I support connecting new architecture on the campus to old architecture, but the image is so historicist."

Andersson's design was influenced by other campus buildings, as he and his partner, the late Charles Moore, toured K-State for creative inspiration.

There has already been published criticism of the building from the College of Architecture and Design. In the February 1994 "Archnews," a journal of the American Institute of Architecture Students, two essays evaluated the museum project that had just then been formally presented.

In the issue, then-student of architecture David Meis criticized the design for creating a redundant gate to the campus because the museum lies within Higginbotham Gate.

One of the selling points of Andersson's design with the building committee was its symbolic creation of an arched gateway.

Meis wrote, "What will the other gate possibly do besides confuse the user of the space?"

Of this, Andersson said, "I think you've got a symbolic tip at your campus gateway that doesn't do anything. The scheme we've done makes an actual space you actually walk through."

In the same issue, a letter by Dwayne Oyler compares the Beach museum's design to the layout of the Student Center at Colby College in Waterville, Maine.

The design of the student center was by Jefferson Riley with Centerbrook Architects and Planners, which began from a partnership with Moore.

Andersson said he has never seen the building.

"I don't think you'll find anything too similar to any of Charles' (Moore) projects in the museum, but you can look," he said.

Charles Moore, the internationally renowned, post-modern architect, was involved in the preliminary design stages of the Beach museum but did not design it. Andersson is the principal architect on the Beach museum for Moore/Andersson Architects based in Austin, Texas. He visited the site May 3.

"I think they are doing a beautiful job," Andersson said. "They are crafting it."

Rawson said, "I'm not an architect, but I just love the building. I wouldn't call it a landmark building, but it's inviting."

Although McNamara calls the Beach museum a weak design, he is happy K-State will get an art museum.

"Ruth Ann Wefald deserves a lot of credit for making this happen," McNamara said. "We're going to have a new museum."

TRIP

Garwick said she will travel with the students and their parents to Washington sometime in late June. The group will spend three days in Washington and stay at a hotel in Georgetown.

"They are excited about the trip.

Some have never flown in an airplane before," Garwick said.

She said the students will also meet with Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., and receive a tour of the Capitol.

The students will receive their savings bonds at an awards ceremony, which Toshiba is host to, and have their picture taken for an advertisement in USA Today.

The students also won a VCR from Toshiba so they could record a five-minute video, which was used for judging the final round.

Garwick said the team worked 45 minutes each day for six weeks in November and December, sometimes devoting recesses, lunch periods and even days off toward the project.

She said she asked the students to participate in the project because of their advanced reading skills.

TUITION

"This service that we're providing will be just that, a service, for students who could not pay their fees some other way," he said.

Ackley said this method of payment should have little effect on the new linear tuition system K-State will be moving to in the fall.

All arrangements needing to be made after a class is dropped or added will be made through AMS.

"What AMS does is have you make up a budget," he said.

"This is how much your tuition and fees are going to be, divide that by three, and this is how much you will pay on each installment."

This service can be used to pay off any debt on the student's account at the time of fee payment.

"Tuition, fees, parking fines, whatever the bottom line is on the bill the student gets at fee payment, that is the amount that's subject to enrolling in this program," Ackley said.

"Housing will not be a part of this," Ackley said.

► BOARD OF REGENTS

Tuition might increase by 3.5 percent

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Students attending Kansas universities will be paying 3.5 percent more in tuition in fall 1997, if the Kansas Board of Regents accepts the recommendation of one of its committees.

The proposal of the Budget Development and Tuition Committee will be given first reading by the board at its May 16 meeting here and will be acted upon at a June 27 meeting.

"We felt this was reasonable," Regent Bob Talkington of Iola, chairman of the committee, said Thursday.

"We wanted to have the increase somewhere around the projected inflation rate."

"Obviously, some of the campuses would like to have more because they feel they need more money," he said.

"But our message to the students is we're not trying to hit them any harder than we have to. We're not trying to hit them with big tuition increases every time they turn around."

The committee includes Regents Phyllis Nolan, Louisburg; Bill Docking, Arkansas City, and Tom Hammond, Wichita; Chancellor Robert Hemenway of the University of Kansas, representatives of each of the six universities and two students.

The 3.5-percent increase would apply across the board, to both resident and non-resident students at all six universities, the University of Kansas School of Medicine, the K-State Veterinary Medicine School and K-State's Salina College of Technology.

His turn

■ You've heard from others; now, after facing expulsion from school, Damon wants you to listen to his story

"It's a big misunderstanding."

That is what former K-State linebacker David Damon said about an incident that occurred earlier this week.

Convicted of sexual assault of K-State student Amy Schulz for an incident that occurred in November 1994, Damon is restricted from making contact with Schulz as part of sanctions imposed upon him by the University.

But as reported in Thursday's Collegian, it was found Damon violated those sanctions by attending a women's studies class with his girlfriend Tuesday. Schulz was also in attendance in the class. Damon's status as a student at K-State is in jeopardy.

In a letter from Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco, Damon was notified Thursday morning of his possible dismissal from the University.

"The sanctions prohibited you from initiating contact with Ms. Schulz and restricted your presence on University property 'only to attend classes, work in the library, and attend activities that are related to your participation in KSU football,'" Bosco stated in the letter.

But Damon and his girlfriend said the incident was a misunderstanding.

"(In my women's studies class) we've talked about the law and violence and about battered women, and I thought in the position he (Damon) is in right now, maybe he should go talk to my instructor and sit in on our class since we're talking about all this stuff," said Heather Sell, senior in psychology and occupational therapy and Damon's girlfriend.

Sell said she invited Damon to the class in the hopes that it

Teen-agers slay high school band director

Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. — High school band director Mark Schwebes knew the kids were up to no good when he ran into a band member and another student on school grounds late one night.

He took away the cans of peaches they were going to throw through windows and sent the youngsters home, telling them to expect a visit from the school deputy the next day.

Hours later, Schwebes answered a knock at his door and took a blast in the face from a 12-gauge shotgun.

Police say the slaying April 30 was the work of a self-described teen militia called the Lords of Chaos — a group of kids without criminal records whose lives spiraled within three weeks into arson, armed robbery and Schwebes' murder.

"It was like a vortex of bloodlust and arson. It was consuming them. They couldn't get enough," Sheriff John McDougall said.

What made the crimes even more chilling was that there had been no warning that the teen-agers were on the path to prison. One of those charged with murder was a straight-A student who had just won a four-year college scholarship.

The shock was compounded by the community's own ground-breaking work to fight juvenile crime.

Insurance speaker visits K-State today

Rhonda A. Lee
staff reporter

Kathleen Sebelius, insurance commissioner for the state of Kansas, will be making her second visit in two weeks when she visits K-State at 2 p.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

She will speak to the Flint Hills Association of Life Underwriters about her new book, "Auto Insurance Shoppers Guide." The book talks about such topics as comparative rates, what is in auto insurance coverage and what is required of auto insurance. It is written in a simple language that will help the ordinary shopper, Sebelius' spokesman Joe Scranton said.

"It might be of interest to college students that there are comparative rates there, and a lot of them buy auto insurance and they might want to see if they can get the best deal possible," he said.

Insurance agent Susan Davis of the Insurance Center in Junction City ordered the book to see what other insurance companies were licensed in the area. She said since the book prints comparative rates, it is easier to determine how to cover people.

The book is free and can be obtained by calling 1-800-432-2484.

► MANHATTAN POST OFFICE

Postal carriers question use of automated sorter

Ceri Cornelison
city/government editor

The Manhattan Post Office added three new machines into its daily operation the first week of December that are supposed to take the mail into the 21st century and relieve the work load of mail carriers.

The delivery point sequence machines were added to the post office to sort mail, a job mail carriers used to do.

The DPS machines are part of a nationwide trend in post offices that will be phased in a period of two to three years.

The DPS machines read an 11-digit bar code placed by a customer service bar coding sequence machine at the Topeka Post Office and automatically places the mail in order of delivery.

The 11-digit bar code is the five-digit zip code, plus a four digit add-on that was assigned to different parts of the city by the post office.

The last two digits of the house number are added to the code.

For example, if an address were 1234 Rock Road, 34 would be added to the bar code.

The mail carrier then gets the mail in delivery sequence and is ready to deliver his/her route.

But some mail carriers said the DPS is more hassle than it's worth and after five months of operation are still not sorting mail correctly.

■ MISDIRECTED MAIL

John Smith, a mail carrier for more than 20 years who wishes to remain anonymous, said the DPS machines are faster at sorting the mail, but they are full of "bad mail."

He said bad mail happens when the incorrect bar codes are on a letter but the correct address is on it.

The mail is misdelivered because the DPS machines only read the bar code.

When postal carriers sorted mail, they could correct this problem, Smith said.

Another mail carrier for more than 10 years, who wished to remain anonymous, said some people have made complaints when mail was misdelivered by a substitute.

Carl Urbanek, president of the National Association for Letter Carriers, Branch 1018, and mail carrier, said he thinks DPS is doing well as far as putting things in order as long as it has the 11-digit zip code, but the problem is when people move.

He said mail carriers are dealing with mail on the street that has to be redelivered or forwarded to a different address.

The DPS machine will kick out mail needing to be forwarded for up to 30 days, but after that the mail is sorted into its old routes.

Residential routes, which is what Urbanek delivers, works well with the DPS.

► TAX ACTIVIST SUES JOHNSON COUNTY TO PROMPT INVESTIGATION

TOPEKA (AP) — A property-tax activist has filed a lawsuit hoping to force the state to investigate what he contends are unfair appraisals in Johnson County.

Richard Rodewald of Eudora, who also is a congressional candidate, filed his lawsuit Thursday in Shawnee County District Court.

Named as defendants are Attorney General Carla Stovall;

Mark Beck, the state's director of property valuation, and former state Sen. Gus Bogina, chairman of the state Board of Tax Appeals.

Rodewald's lawsuit stems from allegations made by two Johnson County property-tax protesters. They allege county appraiser's office has shown favoritism, so that politically well-connected individuals and officials have received tax breaks.

The appraiser's office denies the allegation. The Johnson County Board of Commissioners established a five-person committee to review appraisals.

"This is simply putting five foxes in the chicken coop to protect the chickens," Rodewald said in his lawsuit. "The logical result will be fewer chickens and five fatter foxes."

► DOLE BASHES FOREIGN POLICY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Bob Dole issued a broad election-year indictment of President Clinton's foreign policy Thursday, accusing his rival of weakness, indecision, doubletalk and incoherence.

The Republican presidential candidate did agree with Clinton about giving China another year of most favored nation trade privileges. But he said Clinton's wobbly leadership made it a tough sell in Congress.

Dole also proposed a break-off in talks with North Korea and a new agreement with Asian allies on ballistic missile defenses.

In a speech that took months to prepare and nearly an hour to deliver, the Senate majority leader used scathing language to try to contrast Clinton's foreign policy views with his own — differences that are not always clear-cut.

He accused the president of coddling North Korea, slighting South Korea, lacking a clear policy toward China, amateurish posturing in trade disputes with Japan, ambiguity toward Taiwan and an over-reliance on former President Jimmy Carter to get him out of foreign-policy binds.

► PARTY SPLITS FROM MANDELA

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — The party that gave South Africa apartheid decided Thursday to withdraw from President Nelson Mandela's unity government and try to influence policy as a vigilant opposition force.

In an announcement that reflected the deepening maturity of South Africa's democracy, the white-led National Party said it would leave the government June 30.

The announcement came one day after the Constitutional Assembly accepted a new constitution.

"The National Party has felt for some time now that our influence within the government of national unity has been declining," party leader F.W. de Klerk said. He had expressed concern Wednesday that the new constitution gave too much power to the governing party.

The withdrawal also appeared to be motivated in part by the National Party's desire to position itself as an independent force before the 1999 parliamentary elections.

► FBI MOVES UNABOMBER SHACK

LINCOLN, Mont. (AP) — Theodore Kaczynski's mountain shack has been moved a short distance and might be flown by military helicopter to Great Falls, 75 miles away, to preserve it as evidence and protect it from scavengers.

The Unabomber suspect was arrested at the 10-by-12-foot plywood shack near Lincoln on April 3.

George Grotz, FBI spokesman in San Francisco, said Thursday the cabin was moved a short distance and placed on skids. He said it will be moved from the mountain pass within a few days to a site not yet selected.

"The FBI wanted to secure the building as evidence and is looking for a location, potentially in Great Falls," Montana National Guard spokesman Dan Rapkoch said.

He said the FBI inquired about the use of a heavy-duty helicopter to lift the shack.

► INDIAN ELECTION RESULTS SHAKY

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — After guiding India's 50-year transformation from a colonial backwater to a rising Third World power, the secular Congress Party conceded Thursday it lost a parliamentary election to Hindu nationalists.

Political blunders and social changes combined to topple the Congress Party and Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao — who, for a reputed political survivor, proved surprisingly inept at keeping his party in power.

Rao began preparing his resignation. The biggest winner in three days of voting, the Bharatiya Janata Party, started seeking partners to form a coalition government.

But incomplete election returns — and troubles the party could have in forming an alliance — left it unclear who would govern this nation of 920 million people, the world's most populous democracy.

Rao met President Shankar Dayal Sharma and told him he would resign, Indian media reported. Rao is expected to submit his resignation after a Cabinet meeting Friday.

Because no party won a majority, the president has some discretion in choosing which party gets the first chance to form the next government.

Singers to perform last concert of year

■ K-State Singers will present a medley of sounds this weekend

Jessica White
staff reporter

The K-State Singers will perform their last concert of the year this weekend.

"It's a different type of concert," said Benji Kruse, senior in marketing and manager for the Singers.

"It's not the standard march everyone up on risers and hear ultra-classical music," he said.

"It's a lot of fun, and there's different types of music, something for everybody."

Not only will the group be singing, it will also dances.

"All of our music is choreographed so we're singing and dancing through the entire two hours," Kruse said.

Kruse said the Singers will perform its entire repertoire for this year.

"Our repertoire is just a wide mix of show tunes, jazz, soft rock and pop types of things," he said.

"We have a big Broadway medley that we'll be doing."

Kruse said the Singers would also be performing a TV commercials' medley.

"It's just a big medley of tons and tons of commercials all thrown together one right after the other," Kruse said. "It's a lot of fun for the group to do."

The Singers is made up of 14 vocalists, a percussionist, a bass guitarist, a pianist and a sound technician.

Membership in the group is limited to non-music majors.

"We've all had a love and interest in music our entire lives, and the group takes a lot of time, so it's a commitment to music," Kruse said.

The group travels all over Kansas and the Midwest to perform in about 40 shows each year.

This year it has performed in Oklahoma City, Tulsa and Dallas.

Kruse said the singers help promote K-State and provide publicity for the University.

However, the group does not receive funding from the University. It earns all funding from its performances.

The concert will be at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Musical comes to Manhattan

Rhonda A. Lee
staff reporter

One of the greatest musicals to grace a stage will soon be gracing the Manhattan Civic Theatre.

"The Sound of Music," with a cast of more than 70 actors, will be performed at 7:30 p.m. May 9 to 12 and 17 to 18, with a matinee at 2 p.m. this Sunday. The show is part of the Manhattan Civic Theatre's 40th season this year.

About 130 people auditioned for a role in the musical.

"I wanted to do a show where I could make a really large production that involved anybody that wanted to be a part of it," Fred Nelson, director of the musical, said.

Nelson said he hoped that his cast was enjoying the community theater experience.

"They bring a wide variety of experiences, and talent, and ability to the stage," Nelson said.

"I think the common factor is that they're all enjoying themselves, and they've all worked very hard to get to the point where they are at."

The cast has been rehearsing since the middle of March.

Prices for "The Sound of Music" are $10 for adults, $8.50 for students/senior, and $5 children 12 and under. The show will be 7:30 p.m. through Sunday and 17 to 18, with a matinee Sunday at 2 p.m.

Apparel design major suggests costume redesign for internship

■ Student develops list of ideas for improvement of costumes

Jill Story
staff reporter

When at a theme park, be sure to get your picture taken with one of the costumed characters. While you might be smiling for the camera, keep in mind that the person inside the costume probably is not.

"Working in an environment that reaches temperatures of more than 120 degrees and then asking workers to wear the oversized character suits and be able to sing, dance and greet the guests of the park is pushing the limits of human tolerance," Marla Day, senior in apparel design, said.

Day, while interning last summer at the MGM Grand Adventures theme park in Las Vegas, found some problems in the design of the character costumes.

Taking her apparel design knowledge to the drawing board, Day developed a list of ideas for improvement of the costumes and sent the suggestions to her supervisors at the park.

"The redesign of fabrications includes a change from nylon to a mesh type fabric to let moisture out, and changes in the outer fur fabric to a lightweight material that will reflect sunlight," Day said.

Another suggestion Day had was to install small fans inside the costumes to help the air circulate and keep the body cooler.

"These are the same fans used on the inside of computers," Day said. "They can be made to operate on a nine-volt battery."

Day said her suggestions had been received but not acted upon as of yet. The theme parks usually buy their costumes from a design house. One costume can cost from between $25,000 and $40,000 and they only last for about two years.

The costume shop at MGM grand is looking into the cost-effectiveness of building their own costumes at the park, Day said, and if they do, the implementation of her ideas is a definite possibility.

"Making changes to the system can make a significant difference. The benefits gained by utilizing some or all of the recommendations addressed should improve the comfort factors of the actors involved," she said.

Overall, the experience Day gained in her internship was beneficial.

"My internship was definitely a highlight of my career. It was exciting and rewarding to be utilizing things I have learned, and meet people in my field," she said.

Day plans to do graduate work in apparel design at K-State in the fall.

She is unsure of exactly what she wants to do once she is finished with her education.

Teaching is a possibility, and so is working with functional clothing design for handicapped people.

"Through the master's program, I hope to gain more knowledge in the functional design area and find a better way to serve others," Day said.

COLLEGIAN Opinion

Collegian will miss journalism professor

QUICKread

Take some time out to tell your favorite professors how much they mean to you today.

The hallowed halls of Kedzie won't be the same after this semester. Harry Marsh, head of the print-journalism sequence, is retiring and moving to North Carolina.

Marsh is beloved by most students who come in contact with him. He is the only journalism professor who routinely comes into the Collegian newsroom just to say "Hi." He genuinely cares about students and their lives, often taking the time to ask how a person is doing and genuinely wanting to hear the answer.

Young at heart, he's kicked back with a beer and talked shop with the editors a time or two, as well as making an appearance at a few parties.

Marsh is both a good adviser and good at giving advice. He draws on his wealth of reporting and photography experience to give reporters another angle or a better lead.

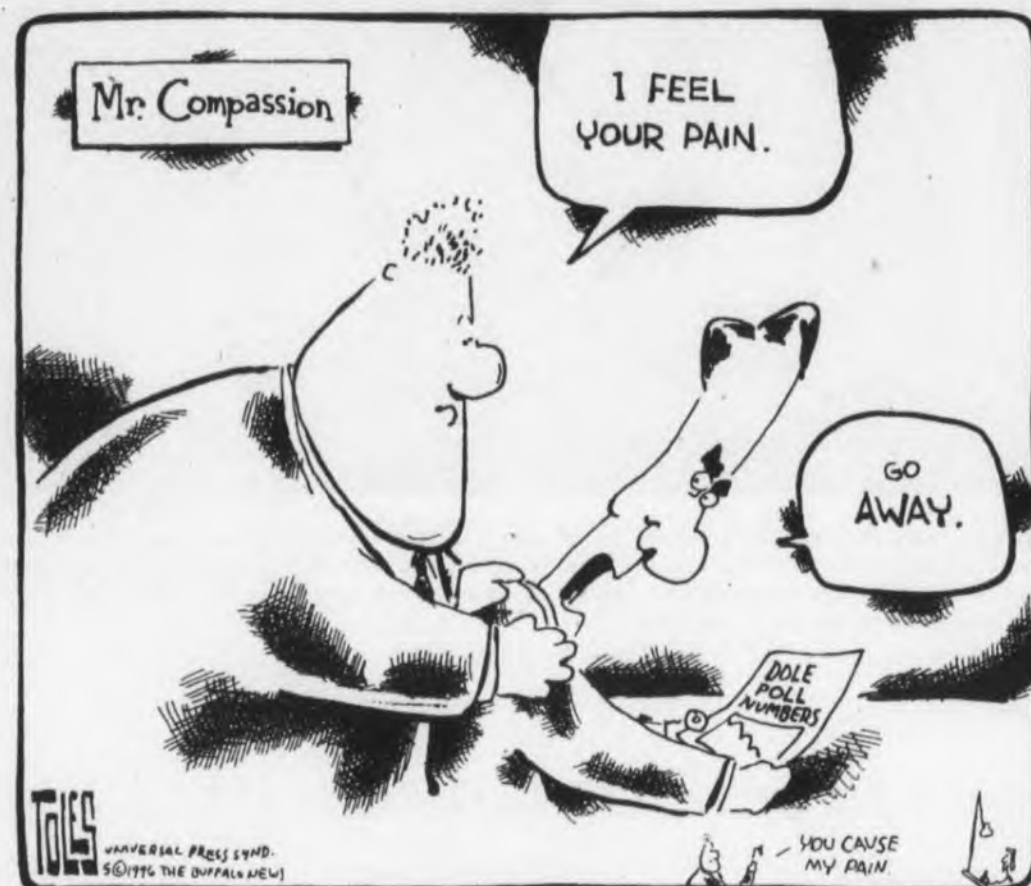

He is a passionate defender of freedom of the press and recently made several of the Collegian editors cry when he spoke on the importance of freedom of the press before the Board of Student Publications. Marsh has always supported the Collegian's rights and always let us do it our way and make our own mistakes, without interference.

Most of all, Marsh is the perfect mix of a professor. He teaches with compassion, does up-to-date research and is involved in students' lives. He is, most of all, a good man.

We will miss you, Dr. Marsh. Remember to send us a postcard or two.

And as this is the last editorial of the semester, we urge all students to say something to those professors who mean a lot to you. There are many professors like Marsh on campus. Let them know they're appreciated.

TOLES

The root cause of politics

Once again the other day, I was talking to my good friend Rushie. As you might know, Rushie is my right-wing friend who's rarely right.

Well ya see, lately Rushie has kind of been in a funk. Of course, he'd never call it a funk because that would hearken back to a type of devil's music that Rushie finds particularly abhorrent.

Rushie's depressed because of the way his boy, Bobbie Dole, is doing in the polls. Why anyone wouldn't want to vote for this great icon of American culture, he can't understand. For years and years and even more years, Dole has stood squarely behind the values that all true Americans love — money, money and money. Why, he's even said he'd be another Ronald Reagan if that's what it took to get him elected.

"But you know, Franquemont," Rushie said. "You have no great reason to gloat. The only other alternative is old yellow-belly Clinton."

"I realize that," I said. "It truly is a shame that a democracy can't offer up anything better than the lesser of two evils."

"You know what your side's real problem is?" Rushie asked. "Lack of cajones. From the Democrats all the way down to those socialist friends of yours, you lack gamesmanship, commitment and the guts to see your ideas become reality."

"Huh," I replied, "I don't think its anywhere near that extreme. We are just not willing to be as hard-hearted as you guys."

"Look, Franquemont. You and I both know Republicans are running a con job with the American people. It's a good con, though, and here's why: Although Republicans are working off a completely corporate agenda, they appear to be for change, calling it positive change. Democrats, meanwhile, are seen as being status quo," Rushie taunted.

"Democrats try their best to avoid conflict, fearing that it will look bad. They'll even compromise to a point where nothing controversial will ever come up. Of course only the most mundane things can happen under this system, so no progress is made," Rushie continued.

Well, let me tell you, it's rare that Rushie will get this honest with his political analysis. Therefore, I'm willing to humor him a bit further.

"Tell me, my friend," I said. "What is the root cause behind all of this?"

"You see," responded Rushie, in that high-ringing voice he assumes while lecturing. "It all goes back to the fact that neither of the two parties used to be that far away from one another. They're still closer than most people believe."

"Now, however, the younger generation of Republicans see no reason to hold back. They will go all out to implement their programs and the Democrats, and in some cases the more moderate faction of their own party are left to swing in the wind, wondering what's happened to their cozy little system."

"Now a paradigm shift has taken place, and you and all your little progressive friends are on the sidelines," Rushie finished.

Now I hope Rushie is wrong about all of this stuff. I'd like to think this country could once again be governed by people rationally talking out their differences and forming a common ground.

Right now, though, the Republicans sit 90 percent of the way to absolute right wing, while the Democrats remain centrist. Even if there are any compromises, they are bound to favor the Republicans.

I don't have any quick solutions to this. I'd like to think the American public could wake up to what is going on, but history shows it's going to take hard times and depression before that ever happens.

I'd like to think the left could mobilize and stand up, but once again history shows that sectarian in-fighting has always plagued us. I don't know if enough of it is willing to come together to make a difference.

I'd love to be proven wrong.

Trying to change campus changed me

It's time for me to leave.

I'm not sure I'm ready to leave. I need to say some things first.

I've been writing for the Collegian every semester since spring 1994. I applied to the Collegian because I had decided the opinion page stunk, and I could make it better. I also hoped I could make K-State a better place.

I was wrong. I overestimated myself and everyone else.

Writing for the Collegian not only hasn't changed the world, it hasn't even changed the campus. And no matter how good of a writer I might or might not be, I have not improved the Collegian in any appreciable manner. Maybe I have made some of you think while you were on your way to the crossword or sports section. Maybe I have pissed you off or given you cause to roll your eyes in exasperation.

Or maybe I helped you feel like someone was on your side.

But evoking responses and heightening awareness are not the same as improving the campus. If I've been anything for this campus, it has been a facilitator of learning and change, not an innovator or instructor. Being a Collegian writer has improved and taught me more than it has anyone or anything else.

I've realized most of you, even the most learned of you, do not care about what I care about and do not want to care.

That's not to say you are all apathetic. Most of you are, but many of you have strong beliefs about issues.

Most of those of us who are passionate about our views are slaves to ideology rather than masters of critical thinking. Consequently, discussion of issues tends to revolve around the same old thesis being pitted against the same old antitheses with few fresh ideas being introduced for consideration.

I've also learned that most of you are put off by words like "antitheses," too.

There are lots of brilliant people on campus with some rather profound insights. They tend either to teach or to keep to themselves, I've noticed. They rarely write for the Collegian or submit letters to the editor.

I have learned there is a lot of hostility and ill will toward the Collegian. We Collegian writers are the targets.

Some people I've interviewed have feared I would misquote them, which I've never done.

I've been chastised for working for a newspaper that some people allege negligently or intentionally distorts, sensationalizes and censors the news.

Students and instructors have made erroneous assumptions about me or have been rude to me based on their disdain of this newspaper.

I've been labeled a pedophile, a faggot, a nigger lover, a racist, a liberal, a conservative and other assorted names for the opinions I've expressed on this page.

I was told by one instructor not to criticize her job performance in print, with the clear implication that my grade would be jeopardized if I did.

So I've learned we are indeed judged by the companies we work for, and being outspoken is anathema to being popular, unless you always tell people what they wish to hear, like politicians do.

My opinions have been criticized in letters to the editor, which I don't mind except when the criticism is the result of poor reading comprehension, rather than disagreement with what I actually wrote — an all-too-often occurrence. I've learned the grace that comes from resisting the urge to respond to these people personally or in my writing.

Some Collegian staff members seem to like me. I can be both compassionate and hilariously crude. They know that when I'm not writhing in sarcasm and satire, I'm completely sincere and honest. I give good advice and offer unique insights. I offer my colleagues support and encouragement.

In spite of pretensions to the contrary, I do have the respect of the people who work with me, even if they don't know me well. I'm not sure why.

I've been paid to experience music and theater and then share my insights with our readers.

I've been paid to try to add a dash of base humor to the Collegian in Smatterings every week. I've also brought that irreverent attitude to our newsroom, which is often sorely in need of some levity, for free.

As arts, entertainment and features editor last summer, I was paid to put together the Diversions page and to give struggling beginning reporters guidance and constructive criticism.

I was paid to do these things, but not with much money. Most of my remuneration was in the satisfaction that comes from always trying to learn to be the best I can at being myself, in spite of all the detractions and a deficit of positive feedback from within and outside the newsroom.

It is this satisfaction — the satisfaction of persistence — that has made working at the Collegian a positive experience for these last seven consecutive semesters.

For this opportunity, I thank all of you. For the persistence, I thank God.

Goodbye.

Sisterly love

For years, the white photo album sat gathering dust in the living room. Since my folks' divorce, it has been buried in a box in my mother's basement.

The first pages are a history of my birth and childhood. I'm sure everyone has the same photos in their family album — child naked on a blanket, child naked in the bathtub, child naked with underwear on her head. (OK, maybe not the last. Underwear on the head was a big thing for the kids in my family.)

About halfway through the book, the album's star changes. My little sister entered the world on Thanksgiving Day. A myriad of pictures in the album show me holding her and envying the bright red hair that soon turned as blond as mine.

Picture after picture show us together — fishing, dressing my cat Sylvester in doll clothes, playing with Barbies, posing with underwear on our heads. We understood each other perfectly.

Most of these pictures I only remember as that — pictures. I don't remember the specific instance when Mom popped out the camera and told us to smile. But one or two pictures I do have memories for.

I was in first or second grade, and we lived in Prairie Glenn Place, here in Manhattan. Dad was going to school and bartending at Auntie Mae's Parlor. Mom worked for the Lincoln-Mercury dealer.

Out by the back porch was a tiny plot of land where a previous tenant had planted strawberries. This particular day was hot, and we were painting with watercolors and eating strawberries. Mix unsupervised children and paint together, and you get us painting each other.

Mom snapped a cheesy picture before hustling us upstairs to take a bath. I remember having so much paint on us that our joint bath turned the water a bright purple.

I guess one of the reasons I remember this instance is because it is one of the few happy childhood memories I have. The family soon moved to Wichita after Dad graduated. He started drinking, my parents started having problems, and I started to grow up.

I can pinpoint moving to Wichita as the beginning of when Kari and I began to grow apart. I'm four-and-a-half years older than she is. When I started becoming a teenager, she was still a kid. We stopped understanding each other and slowly grew apart.

As she grew older, I was in the midst of teen angst, and we started fighting. We'd often have horrid arguments, with one shrieking how much she hated the other, right before slamming a door.

After I left for college, I came back to Wichita on breaks to find a human being, oddly enough, instead of the kid I thought of her as. My Dad's alcoholism and parent's divorce made both of us grow up way too quickly; but Kari was especially hurt, as she daily sat in on the front-lines of the battlefield that was my parents' marriage.

Kari and I suffered through five or six horrible years together. Those experiences, and the final blow of our grandmother's death, bound us together in ways most people don't understand.

We talked about that phenomenon a few weeks ago. We agreed it's difficult to explain to people why certain things upset us, or why we respond in certain ways. They haven't led the life we have and can't possibly understand. Kari and I understand each other perfectly again.

While I might be bitter that my life has almost always been difficult, I am grateful for the opportunity to get closer to my sister. She's one of the few people I can always turn to. She's also one of the coolest people I know. If you don't know her, you should try to meet her.

A few days ago, a couple friends laughed at me after I scolded Kari in the newsroom. "Kariann Fuqua," they mocked. "You sound so maternal."

It was just my big-sister voice, but they had a point. It was maternal, and Kari does the same thing to me. We've both gotten used to mothering each other and taking care of the other.

That is what makes graduating next week so difficult.

So now I will embarrass my sister.

Care-bear, Kari-canny, I will miss you this summer. I'm going on an adventure worthy of Doris Day, and unfortunately, you have to wait a few years before you can join me. So think of me often, watch "Pillow Talk" and "Shag," and don't do too much growing up while I'm gone, OK?

Love from your neato-burrito sis,
Deato

STUDENTS SHOULD BE BIG BROTHERS AND SISTERS

Editor,
Manhattan is in desperate need of positive role models. The Big Brothers and Big Sisters Organization has around 78 children on a waiting list for a Big Brother/Sister.

For the students who are not leaving for the summer, this would be a perfect opportunity to make a positive difference in a kid's life. What these kids need is a friend, especially for the summer.

This would be a perfect opportunity to be a role model for a kid who desperately needs a role model in their life.

LETTER PRINTED FALSE INFORMATION ABOUT VIETNAM

Editor,
This is a response to a letter in the May 8 Collegian. Because you chose to not correct the author's false information, it is left up to readers like myself.

Tom Powell made a lot of silly claims that clearly show his lack of education in history. He refers to Henry Kissinger and President Nixon as being responsible for the war in Vietnam. I don't know what history he may be studying, but I was in that war from December 1969 through November 1970.

Maybe Powell has been watching too many Oliver Stone movies? Prior to my entry into the U.S. Army, I was an activist against the war throughout my high school years, and one thing is certain — Kissinger and Nixon were not responsible for starting that war, nor its escalation.

President Johnson escalated the war to "... protect vital U.S. interests..." after President Kennedy had escalated it to aid President Diem shortly before his (President Diem's) assassination. I had originally joined the U.S. Army to become a helicopter pilot, but I had no sooner joined and finished my basic training when newly elected Nixon — yes, big, bad Nixon — began his cutbacks of troops going to Vietnam.

ERNEST FOWLER

"The entire years of the war from 1969 on were spent by Kissinger and Nixon trying to extract the U.S. from a war it did not want to be in from the first."

His cutbacks cut my pilot career completely out, but I still went to Vietnam as an artillery survey specialist. Artillery surveyor was a nice name for forward observer.

Nixon's continued withdrawal from the conflict in Vietnam caught me again as I approached my date to return to the United States. My original date to return was first cut short by a week, then two weeks, and finally it became a four-week early return to the United States.

The entire years of the war from 1969 on were spent by Kissinger and Nixon in trying to extract the U.S. from a war it did not want to be in from the first. As for the involvements in Cambodia, Laos and other places unmentioned, those were happening all the way back into 1965, before Nixon assumed office and began his cutbacks.

I seriously question Powell's involvement in that war in light of his clear misinformation presented to this newspaper and its readers. Clearly he did not expect an argument, especially from a former veteran who had "been there, done that."

FACULTY DON'T TEACH FOR THE MONEY

Editor,
I applaud the Collegian's recent tribute to George Wilcoxon's love of education. If you were to survey our campus, you would find many retired professors with emeritus status who continue to enrich students, faculty and the citizens of Kansas with their collective wisdom, with no pay.

What most of us are told, or already know, is that any satisfaction you derive from academia is not to be found in money. The K-State faculty is one of the lowest-paid in the Big 8 and behind our peer institutions in other states. There are many fine faculty members at this University who choose to stay here for love of things other than money.

The students, Manhattan and the emphasis on teaching are the rewards and satisfaction reaped from staying here. It does not surprise me that we have fine educators like Wilcoxon who want to continue to contribute to K-State.

On a more realistic note, I am not aware of any new assistant professor on this campus who makes a salary of $65,000 per year (benefit package included). This assumes that Wilcoxon would be replaced by someone of that rank.

I go even further to submit that you will find full professors who do not earn that amount as straight salary. Perhaps with Wilcoxon's spe-

ICY WINTER PROVES GLOBAL WARMING TO BE A MYTH

Editor,
I just could not help but be shocked by the absurdity of Lach Franquemont's global warming column. Franquemont, does your memory not go back as recently as last month, when all kinds of record low temperatures, wind chill as low as -50 degrees, and some of the worst blizzards the East Coast has ever seen plagued the globe?

Did you forget about all the closed airports, the mounds of snow and government shut-downs due to this winter? This winter was probably one of the hardest in decades. Now explain your rationalization the globe is getting warmer.

You said in your column you hope common sense

JON VALENTINE

"This winter was probably one of the hardest in decades. Now explain your rationalization the globe is getting warmer."

prevails. It is my contention, sir, that you are quite lacking in this department of common sense. Am I alone in growing extremely tired of these outlandish claims by the "scientific community?"

Even though the opposite of what these scientists claim is right in front of our eyes, terrified philosophers like Franquemont write columns about these claims and attack industry. Maybe we, as Americans, should just tell China, India and Brazil to stop all of their silly industrializing and keep the whole world living in the 1960s, obviously where Franquemont thinks he is.

Also, what wasn't brought up was a canopy of carbon dioxide would trap solar heat. Melting polar ice caps would create precipitation and a warm, wet subtropical climate. Also, I understand carbon dioxide dissolved in water is a fertilizer, and tropical rainstorms create ozone. Our deserts might be threatened by massive reforestation. This might be a mechanism for the earth's self-healing.

THERE ARE AT LEAST TWO SIDES TO EVERY STORY

Editor,
First of all, thanks to everyone for everything. Now maybe that sounds a little vague, but to list all of the great aspects now would change this to a large letter.

Second, I will throw rocks at my house, in order to prove I do not live in a glass house.

Ask anyone who knows me, think they know me and have lived with me, they probably know much more interesting "secrets" than have been published in the Collegian recently criticizing certain people.

But for myself, I am a bad person for these and many additional reasons: aggressive, stubborn, glib, party attitude and being intense.

It is obviously easy to criticize, but for a change of pace, why aren't there front-page articles informing people of the great involvement in various activities?

Yes, I have been reading the Collegian almost entirely for about seven years (high school and college), and the articles are there about the good things, but people retain the easier, more sensational coverage of the bad.

I know there are always at least two sides to every story (usually an infinite amount) and knowing that I will state sincerely that I believe David Damon is a good friend, although there may be other aspects which I do not fully understand.

Good luck on finals to students, faculty and everyone involved with any of us at this University.

Nebraska dominates K-State in dual meet

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

The cliché of a sports team gaining a moral victory might be overused, but for the K-State track team, it seems to fit.

Facing powerhouse Nebraska in a dual meet Thursday at the R.V. Christian Track Complex, the K-State women fell 101-80, and the men fell 123-76.

But what makes the meet a moral victory is the strength of Nebraska, the favorites to win the conference championships next weekend in Lincoln, Neb.

"I think it's the best team ever assembled. They go two deep with national caliber guys in almost every event," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said.

And Rovelto said he didn't expect to win the meet.

"It was 104 to 70 something that I had predicted in advance," Rovelto said.

Even with the loss, the day was not without its individual highlights. Vanitta Kinard picked up the triple-jump competition, edging two-time defending national champion Nicola Martial. Kinard's distance was 43'6," edging Martial's distance of 43'5."

Susan Seymour was also mentioned by Rovelto as one of the day's standouts.

"Seymour in the 100 was outstanding," Rovelto said. "Her long jump — that's only the second time she's done long jump, and she did 18'8" or 18'9."

Seymour placed second in the 100-meter dash with a time of 11.63 and fourth in the long jump with a distance of 18'9-1/2."

The women's 4x100 team's first place time of 45.90 was impressive, Rovelto said.

"The 4x1 had a good effort," Rovelto said. "To run that kind of mark in a dual meet is pretty good. And that's a young group."

The women's 400-meter com-

The Big 8 track championships have at least one thing in common with the Big 8 football race during the past few years.

If one believes what is said before the meet, the rest of the league might as well give the championship to Nebraska before the competition even starts.

But it remains to be seen if the second part — the actual championships — follows the football race.

Certainly, Nebraska has to be considered a favorite entering the meet, slated for May 20-21 in the Cornhuskers' backyard of Lincoln, Neb.

"I think Nebraska will win by 20 or so," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said. "Obviously, they've got two quality athletes in every event."

And while Colorado is expected to give Nebraska perhaps its toughest competition, the Husker men have been called one of the best teams ever assembled.

"I think this team, Nebraska, in both men's and women's, has one of the best teams they've ever had," Rovelto said.

K-State's final tuneup for the Big 8 championships came Thursday, when the Cats faced the Huskers in a dual meet in Manhattan. On the women's side, Nebraska won the meet 101-80. On the men's side, the Huskers also won 123-76.

"I want to compete against the best we can compete against," Rovelto said. "I'd rather get beat by a good team than beat teams that aren't as good."

"It doesn't bother me to get beat by really good teams."

The NCAA Championships will take place from May 29 to June 1 in Eugene, Ore., while the U.S. Olympic Trials are slated for June 14-23 in Atlanta.

NBA draft a possibility for Davis, Hatcher

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

Juniors like Marcus Camby and Tim Duncan have declared their eligibility for the NBA draft. So have sophomores Ronnie Henderson and Antoine Walker. So have freshmen Stephen Marbury and Allen Iverson and prep stars Kobe Bryant and Jermaine O'Neal.

With all the underclassmen cutting their college careers short, it's easy to forget the seniors. Wildcats Tyrone Davis and Elliot Hatcher said they hope not everyone forgets.

For the last two seasons, Hatcher and Davis have been the nucleus of K-State's team.

Now they said they hope to take their game to the next level.

"Right now I'm just working out," Davis said. "I've got an agent, and he's working on some things — he just got back from Phoenix."

Davis, a 6-foot 8-inch forward who averaged 13.2 points and 8.3 rebounds per game last year for the Cats, saw his numbers drop toward the end of the season when a string of nagging injuries limited his productivity.

Now he hopes his work will be rewarded with an invitation to the NBA's pre-draft workout in Chicago later this month.

"I had heard that I would get invited," he said, "but I don't know for sure. I talked to Coach (Tom) Asbury, and he said it's really too early to think about things like that."

Hatcher, who is also awaiting word on the Chicago camp, has already had one opportunity to show his stuff to the NBA scouts.

After averaging 16.5 points, 3.4 rebounds, 3.3 assists and 2.5 steals per game, Hatcher was invited to the NBA scouting camp at Portsmouth, Va.

"I went to the NBA camp at Portsmouth, and they said I did a pretty good job. Right now I'm getting ready for the NBA camp at Chicago," he said.

A number of NBA teams have shown interest in Hatcher, making him confident he will be drafted.

"Most people say I'll probably go in the late first round or early second round," Hatcher said.

"(K-State sports information director) Ben Boyle said there were teams calling for my bios. I don't remember them all, but the Houston Rockets, San Antonio (Spurs) and the Washington Bullets were there."

Davis is not as sure of his status but remains confident he will play professionally in either the NBA or Europe.

"If it doesn't work out, I'll go overseas," Hatcher said.

Davis said. "I'm not even considering the CBA (Continental Basketball Association). If I don't get drafted, I'll go play in Europe."

Davis and Hatcher risk getting lost in the glare of the bigger names and Final Four schools. But Hatcher said K-State's relative lack of recognition will not hurt them too badly.

"I think that hurts me and Tyrone, but not too bad. We got to the (NCAA) Tournament, and we both had some big games here and there."

every major golf magazine.

Drum worked for CBS for several years in the mid-1980s, spiced its golf coverage with whimsical and at times zany reports on the game.

"Drummer was one of the originals, a one-of-a-kind guy who had a big talent and heart of gold," said Larry Dorman, golf writer for the New York Times and current president of the GWAA.

"We all loved him and everyone who was ever around golf and knew him will miss him very much."

A memorial service for Drum, who is survived by his wife, M.J., will be at noon Thursday the Village Chapel in Pinehurst.

"He was writing about my golf when I was still in high school, and has always been a good friend."

"He had a long and active life and will certainly be missed by the golf community of the world," Palmer said.

Drum, a large, good-natured man known for his quick wit and hard-living lifestyle, was a past president of the Golf Writers Association of America and was published in virtually in a hospital Wednesday in Pinehurst, N.C., where he retired. The cause of death was heart failure.

Drum, who had been an all-America basketball player at Alabama, suffered a series of small strokes during the last two years and underwent colon cancer surgery earlier this year.

"I've known Bob Drum almost from the start of my golf career," Palmer said when he learned of Drum's death.

Besides Hess, sophomore pitcher Chris Traylor earned first-team honors, while senior Kevin Wicker was named to the honor roll for the fourth-straight year. Freshman Jason Wells was named to the honor roll as well.

Hess carries a 3.5 grade point average in construction science and management. A year ago, he was also named GTE/CoSida Academic All-American. Traylor has a 3.2 in general studies. Wicker has a 3.0 in management. Wells has a 3.42 GPA in general studies.

GRAMBLING, LA. (AP) — Grambling line-backer Valmond "J.B." Brown, who was named to the All-Southwestern Conference and All-Louisiana second teams as a sophomore, was shot to death by a former teammate early Thursday.

Police arrested Tilcius "Troy" Irvin, 20, and charged him with second-degree murder in the 12:10 a.m. shooting at the Darrow Community Center in Brown's hometown of Gonzales. Irvin is being held in the Ascension Parish Jail on $100,000 bond.

Brown, 20, shot once in the head and once in the chest, was pronounced dead on arrival at Riverview Medical Center in Gonzales.

Brown and Irvin had been teammates at East Ascension High School four years ago.

Cats to face Pokes in last series

Shana Newell
sports editor

While summer vacation begins for K-State students, the K-State baseball team still has a season to wrap up.

After a three-game series at Oklahoma State this weekend, the Wildcats will prepare for the Big 8 Tournament in Oklahoma City. The tournament begins Wednesday and will conclude May 18.

Going into Stillwater, the Cats have found themselves in a battle for the third to fifth-place finishes in the conference. A sweep of the Cowboys will guarantee K-State a third-place finish.

But Coach Mike Clark said the Oklahoma State series is not as important as it might seem.

"There's a 95-percent chance we're going to play OU or OSU in the tournament — no matter what happens," he said.

"There's enough pressure on the guys to play well in Oklahoma City (Big 8 Tournament), so hopefully they don't put pressure on themselves in Stillwater."

Known for being unforgiving to visitors, Allie P. Reynolds Stadium in Stillwater will present much of the same atmosphere the Cats will find at All-Sports Stadium in Oklahoma City, the site of the Big 8 Tournament.

"I really believe this is the perfect way to end the regular Big 8 season because it prepares us mentally and physically..."

MIKE CLARK
K-STATE BASEBALL COACH

The last Big 8 Tournament in Oklahoma City was also a first for the squad. With only a six-team field in the Big 8 tournament, one team in the conference does not receive an invitation. (Colorado does not have a team.) This season that team will be Nebraska, but in season's past, K-

State often found itself left out of post-season play.

"This group of guys is the first group ever to go to back-to-back tournaments," Clark said. "Our seniors have gone to three of the last four Big 8 Tournaments, and I think that's a definite positive."

Clark will send junior Jon Oiseth to the mound in game one of the Cowboys' series. Eric Yanz gets the nod for game two, but the pitcher for game three had not been decided at press time.

Oiseth has a 5.37 ERA with a 6-2 record. In 17 appearances, he has 61 hits and 39 runs against him. He has walked 34 batters, striking out 49.

Yanz has a 5.58 ERA with a 4-5 record. In 13 appearances, Yanz has allowed 57 runs on 84 hits. He has walked 41 batters, striking out 54.

K-State's pitching, the best in the conference, has a team ERA of 3.04. It is led by closer David Johnson with a 2.84 ERA.

"Our relief pitching was a big concern because we weren't getting outside. But we were able to warm a few guys up yesterday, and physically we're in as good as shape as we've been all year," Clark said.

DAMON

would be a positive experience for Damon.

As part of his sanctions, Damon is to enroll in a women's studies class. He said he was interested in observing the class to see what it was like. Damon said he did not know Schulz was a student in the class.

"Do I have a schedule of Ms. Schulz's? They make it sound like my intention of going to that class was to harass Ms. Schulz," Damon said.

However, Damon and Sell said that was not their intention, and if they had known Schulz was a student in the class, Damon would not have attended.

Damon said Sell had repeatedly tried to convince him to observe the class and the day the incident occurred, he was to meet with associate dean of Arts and Sciences William Feyerharm.

But because he stopped by Feyerharm's office during the lunch hour — hours the office is closed — Damon decided he would visit his girlfriend's class while he was waiting to meet with Feyerharm.

Sell said she does not know Schulz and had she known Schulz was also in her class, Sell would not have asked Damon to attend.

"I've never seen her before. I feel bad about it, but I didn't know she was in that class. I just thought I would do him (Damon) a favor by talking to my instructor, you know, by making it a positive issue, and it backfired," Sell said.

Damon said he was also unaware of Schulz's presence, and when he and Sell walked in the lecture hall, they were laughing and talking to each other and weren't really paying attention to anyone else in the room.

After the class, Damon said he attempted to talk to Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center and professor of the class.

Because Davis was busy with other students and Damon still had to meet with Feyerharm, Damon and Sell went to speak with Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, about his future enrollment in a women's studies class.

"When I was in the class, I was not aware of Ms. Schulz. The only reason I didn't talk to Ms. Davis was because she was surrounded by students, talking and things," Damon said.

"We went right to Ms. Scott, who she (Davis) works hand and hand with. I told Ms. Scott, 'I went to this class with my girlfriend. I couldn't talk to Ms. Davis. Ms. Davis was surrounded by students, and I had to get to a meeting. So, could you possibly put in a word for me just in case I have problems getting in the class?' Then we went from there to Dean Feyerharm. Then that night I found out it's on the news when Joe Gordon calls me and says 'Uh-oh, you're on the news again' for violating my probation."

Sell said, "This is purely innocent, and this is how all this stuff gets blown out of proportion. I feel awful about it, like here I'm going to kick him out of the University for inviting him to a class that I thought was going to be a positive thing."

"I spoke with her today (Davis), and she said, 'Yeah, that was a positive thing.'"

Sell said she apologized through Davis to Schulz for bring Damon to class but said the incident was an innocent attempt to help Damon, not harm Schulz.

Damon said he will meet with Bosco Friday afternoon to discuss his possible dismissal. Damon also said he maintains his innocence in assaulting Schulz.

Brothers separated at birth reunite on Troy State gridiron

Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Steven Kelley and Joe Jackson knew each other through high school, playing on opposite sides of one of those great small-town football rivalries.

They shared a bullheaded stubbornness and a knack for doing eye-catching things with a football. Each had been shuttled through a maze of foster homes, never able to piece together the story of his broken family.

Somehow, they ended up on the Troy State football team this spring, and it didn't take long to figure out they had much more in common than football.

Steven Kelley and Joe Jackson are brothers.

Kelley arrived at Troy State on March 24, a freshman transfer from Tennessee. He started hanging around with Jackson, whom he remembered from those Friday night football battles between Dothan and Enterprise high schools in southeast Alabama.

"People would always tell me I looked like Joe Jackson," Kelley said Wednesday. "I never thought anything about it."

Last week, Kelley finally got up the courage to ask Jackson some questions. Kelley called Jackson, his new backfield mate at Troy State, from his residence hall room one night.

"God just told my heart to ask him his full name," Kelley said. "I just knew him as Joe Jackson. So when he told me his name was Joseph Frank Kelley, my heart just fluttered."

Kelley paused, breathing harder into the phone, wondering if he could stand another letdown.

"I said, 'Let me ask you a question,'" Kelley said. "Is your birthday March 18 ..."

They finished the sentence together: "1974."

"I said, 'I'll be down in your room in a minute,'" Kelley said.

Jackson was born to Frank and Mary Kelley on that day 22 years ago. Jackson said he was told he got ill as an infant, and when his parents went to the hospital to visit him, he was gone.

Sally, 20, and Steven, 19, also ended up in foster care, but managed to stay together. Sally said they were taken into state custody because of abuse allegations against the father.

The parents later divorced.

Mary Kelley regained custody of Sally and Steven when they were in grade school, and they lived in Enterprise. The kids knew they had a brother, but didn't know where he was. The family lost track of an older sister, Loretta, about six years ago.

Jackson, meanwhile, was living with his foster family about 20 miles away in Dothan. He became a star fullback on the football team, playing against Kelley, who was a tailback for Enterprise.

"Dothan and Enterprise was a rivalry," Kelley said. "It was a big thing."

Jackson, now a junior, rushed for 509 yards on 127 carries for Troy State last season, leading the Trojans with 13 touchdowns. Kelley arrived with sparkling credentials, though he did not play for the Volunteers last year. As a high school senior, Kelley ran for 1,451 yards and 16 touchdowns, and was among the top running back prospects in the South.

Sally sometimes heard chatter in those high school stands about how the two star players were so much alike. If only she knew her long lost brother had been right there on the football field on Friday nights for three seasons.

"It makes me feel sad that we didn't get to grow up with him," Sally said. "We had so many unanswered questions."

petition also resulted in some strong K-State performances. Belinda Hope captured first with a time of 53:44, while Karriema Parris placed fourth with a time of 56:93.

"These 400 times are pretty good in this wind," Rovelto said.

"That's good for Belinda and a personal record for Karriema."

Other first-place finishes on the women's side went to Wanita Dykstra (high jump, 5'8"), Irma Betancourt (800 meters, 2:11.97) and Staci Lowe (javelin, 152'6").

On the men's side, first-place finishes went to Gene Petersen (shot put, 54' 7 1/2"), Aaron Larsen (javelin, 213'0"), Ryan Clive-Smith (3,000 meters, 8:46.44), David Dominguez (3,000-meter steeplechase, 9:28.0) and the 4x400 meter-relay team (3:16.11).

Overall, Rovelto said he was pleased with the meet, the only dual meet of the year and the final tuneup before the Big 8 championships for K-State.

"I think overall, the thing I'm looking at in the meet is just to see the kids compete well," Rovelto said.

"It looked like the kids were competitive. As long as they do that, the times and distances will take care of themselves."

Before and After

Like a crow's ascent
The time we spent
Do we now descend

Or rise again
Higher still — higher
Yet just as ugly as before

This is not the end
Do not pretend
None exists for birds of flight

Our cycle sings
Each new day alone will stand
Yet just as fresh as the one before

Shall we love and laugh and dance
As doves and swans in sweet romance
Our fate is greater than this

We must be strong
Our flight has a different pattern
Yet just the same as the one before
Just the same as the one before

Sometimes

Sometimes I feel carefree, like a kitten
Young and feisty, pouncing on all I see.
But mostly I am tired and smitten with grief. Invincible, I wish to be.
Sometimes I feel giddy, like a schoolgirl.
Dancing, and laughing, and playing a lot.
I am innocent — as pure as a pearl.
It is invincible that I am not.
Sometimes I want to fly, far, far away.
Over mountains and trees, higher than air
Taking my emotions off of display.
Invincible? I can make it there.
Only if I am allowed to be me,
It is invincible that I can be.

Save Me

We were good at what we did.
We clasped dry hands and were One in the Bond of Love as we peeked out the sides of our eyes to see who really was praying.

Even when our stomachs protested at 37 minutes past noon, we locked our knees around the circle and squeezed harder.

The cavalry was brought in for revivals when needed, and we threw away
all the plastic grape juice cups when we were done.

We drew flowers and the preacher with fangs on our bulletins with pens from the bottoms of our mothers' purses.
We mocked the organist's flaws with a twitch of a smile.

And after all those years of practice
I can still sing
Victory in Jesus without looking down at the hymnal in my hands.

Clinton disclaims role in Whitewater scandal

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — In dramatic video testimony to a hushed courtroom, President Clinton insisted Thursday he had nothing to do with a $300,000 loan at the heart of the criminal case against his former Whitewater partners.

"These things are simply not true," the president said, disputing, as he always has, the account of the prosecution's chief witness.

The defense abruptly rested its case after he testified.

A witness for the defense, Clinton was questioned in the White House April 28 and the tape was shown to jurors, some of whom took notes. He was addressed by both the prosecutor and defense attorneys as "Mr. President."

Although Clinton is not charged in the case, his videotaped appearance marked one of few times in history that a sitting president has testified in a criminal trial.

And it thrust Clinton into a criminal case involving issues from his days as Arkansas governor that have dogged him since the 1992 political campaign.

James McDougal and Gov. Jim Guy Tucker are being tried on charges of conspiring to defraud McDougal's savings and loan of nearly $3 million in government-backed loans in the mid-1980s, including one to McDougal's former wife, Susan. The McDougals are former business partners of the Clintons; Tucker is Clinton's successor in the statehouse.

At the start of his testimony, the president disputed the testimony of David Hale, the chief prosecution witness, who had said Clinton pushed him to make a $300,000 loan from Hale's federally backed lending company to Mrs. McDougal in 1986.

"All I know is that any suggestion that I tried to get any money from him, or I tried to keep that a secret, or I put any pressure on him, these things are simply not true. They didn't happen," Clinton testified.

Conspiracy charges against Susan McDougal were dropped Monday, but she remains charged in four felony counts accusing her of misusing the Hale loan.

Clinton said he never met with Hale and McDougal to discuss arranging the loan to Mrs. McDougal. Hale, a former municipal judge, had testified such a meeting took place and that Clinton was to benefit from part of the loan but wanted his involvement kept secret. The money was never repaid.

Hale, the president countered, has "told two or three different versions of this. I've tried to keep up with these different stories."

The president was dressed in a dark suit and was seated as he testified. From the Hale account to various events involving his Whitewater land venture, his testimony was a replay of what he has been saying for two years.

Clinton said he never borrowed money from the McDougals' failed savings and loan and never asked anyone else to borrow it on his behalf.

Under cross-examination by prosecutor Ray Jahn, the president said he might have been involved in helping to obtain a $20,000 unsecured bank loan in 1978 that he and McDougal used as a down payment for the Whitewater venture.

"I might have. I had some friends who worked there. And I knew the people who owned the bank," Clinton said.

The president also testified that his and Hillary Rodham Clinton's signatures on Whitewater-related documents might be bogus. He said, too, he had not given anyone permission to sign his name.

The events at issue occurred a decade ago, while Clinton was Arkansas governor. Prosecutors had been preparing their case for two years.

Clinton is the fourth chief executive in the past two decades to give videotaped testimony in a criminal trial. Presidents Ford, Carter and Reagan are the others.

U.S. District Court Judge George Howard Jr. must still decide whether the Clinton videotape can be shown outside the courtroom.

House overturns public housing policy

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted Thursday to overturn the nation's 59-year-old policy of housing for the poor in favor of a grant program giving more power to local officials.

The Clinton administration said it would oppose the bill, which was passed on a 315-107 vote, unless changes are made to assure that public housing remains affordable for the most impoverished.

Democrats said the Republican-written plan would increase rents for the poor and turn many of them out into the streets. But majority Republicans said the changes would help rid the nation's largest cities of crumbling and crime-ridden housing projects.

"We're getting back to local involvement, local flexibility," Rep. Rick Lazio, R-New York, said.

Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros commended the House for endorsing changes he said President Clinton had put in place, but he said bill supporters were "wrong to allow rents to be raised on the working poor and to deny scarce federal housing aid to families most in need."

SGA honors member for leadership work

■ Award celebrates work of female leaders in student government

Richea Lecklider
staff reporter

The Student Government Association incorporated a new award into its awards banquet this year.

The Susan M. Scott Outstanding SGA Woman Leader Award was presented to Rebecca Marie Korphage, senior in political science.

Korphage said she was surprised to receive the award.

"There are a lot of strong, up-and-coming student leaders who are women in student government," she said.

Being in student leadership positions comes as nothing new to Korphage.

She was SGA Attorney General throughout the 1995-96 school year. "It's the hut of the judicial branch of student government," Korphage said.

"It's an appointment rather than an elected position, because of the nature of the position," she said.

Korphage's other positions include being a senator for the College of Arts and Sciences for two years. During this time, she was a member of the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee and the Academic Affairs and University Affairs Committee.

During her sophomore year, Korphage worked with legal services for students to expand the services available to students.

Korphage said she was the chair of Legal Services Advisory Board during her junior year. During that time, she rewrote the charter for legal services to include an attorney evaluation.

She said she also was Senate representative on the Union Governing Board during her junior year. During this time, she was on the Union Enhancement Steering Committee.

The woman leadership award was presented in honor of Susan Scott, associate dean of student life.

"I was so honored to have the award named after me — I was moved to tears," Scott said. "I was so surprised — it meant more than anything to me."

Scott said the recipient of the award named in her honor is intelligent, compassionate and a great service leader.

"Becca is just the epitome of a wise student government leader and woman," she said. "It honors me again that this award would go to that kind of a woman."

Korphage said she feels she has learned a great deal from Scott.

"Susan is an absolutely amazing woman. I have learned so much from her," she said.

Korphage said she has learned valuable information from Scott's courses in leadership.

She said she would encourage all women in student government or any leadership position to take classes taught by Scott that involve women and leadership.

She also said Scott is working to create a minor in leadership that would be beneficial for those interested in leadership.

What does the future hold for the award recipient?

"My overall goal is to get involved in a non-profit organization or foundation that deals with youth leadership development," Korphage said.

The new award came about due to a group of women in SGA who formed a "woman's caucus" to discuss issues to help encourage women student leaders.

The result of the caucus involved the naming of the award in hopes it would encourage other women leaders.

▶ HOUSE COMMITTEE

Gasoline prices might decrease

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A proposed rollback of gasoline taxes to help motorists cope with soaring prices cleared a key House committee Thursday, and Republican leaders said they expect final action before Memorial Day.

The House Ways and Means Committee advanced legislation that would suspend the 4.3-cent-a-gallon tax for seven months, despite warnings by Democratic lawmakers that oil companies, not consumers, are most likely to benefit.

Nevertheless, some tax relief for motorists has been gaining bipartisan support in this election year. The rollback, first proposed two weeks ago by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, the GOP presidential nominee, was also embraced Wednesday by President Clinton.

But Clinton said he would sign the measure only in tandem with legislation that would raise the $4.25 minimum wage. Both measures were stalled in a Senate gridlock, although Dole scheduled a vote for next Tuesday in hopes of moving the gas tax bill forward.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., told reporters he expects the full House to vote on the tax measure within two weeks and that it has wide support.

But as nearly four hours of debate before the Ways and Means panel demonstrated, the proposal is not without controversy.

"This is political pandering. (It's) nothing but one, or perhaps two, politicians running for national political office," said Florida Rep. Sam Gibbons, the ranking Democrat on the panel, in a clear reference to both Dole and Clinton.

He suggested there was no need to cut the gasoline tax to deal with what most economists believe is a temporary price spike.

"We need to roll back this tax," countered Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, the panel's chairman, who questioned whether it should have been imposed in the first place three years ago.

The 4.3-cent-a-gallon tax was approved in 1993 on top of an existing 14-cent-a-gallon levy as part of a broader deficit reduction effort championed by Clinton and Democrats who were then the majority in Congress. Not a single Republican lawmaker voted for it.

But Democrats on the panel repeatedly raised concern about whether the savings will make it to the consumer.

Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., called it an open invitation to the oil companies to increase profit margins during the summer months when demand is high and gasoline stockpiles are tight. The House bill gives no assurance that the tax savings will be passed on, he said.

"Do you want to trust the (oil) industry?" Rep. Benjamin Cardin, D-Md., asked.

The House bill would repeal the tax six days after the bill becomes law. The levy would be reinstated on Jan. 1, 1997. If passed on, the tax cut would save motorists about $15 during the seven months, assuming average travel of 15,000 miles a year in a vehicle that gets 25 miles per gallon.

Rep. Sander Levin, D-Mich., suggested it might be just as good to give every motorist a $15 check and keep the tax. "There's no assurance consumers will ever see this," he said. "Prices are likely to go up."

A proposal by Rangel to require that the industry pass on the tax savings was rejected 21-15 after Republicans said it would be impossible to enforce and amounted to an attempt by government to fix prices.

The tax measure cleared the House committee along generally party lines, 23-13, with all but two Democrats voting against it. The panel's Republican majority was solid in its support.

The tax reduction is expected to cost the Treasury $2.9 billion.

Limousine drivers shuttle rich, famous

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The artist formerly known as Prince is aloof, Leonard Nimoy "a little brusque," and Kathie Lee Gifford offers only a sunny "thank you" instead of a tip.

That's the word from the league of limousine drivers who shuttle their charges through Hollywood's fast lanes.

It can be a job that requires a diplomat's finesse. Take, for example, the time when driver David Gerson found Donald Trump's then-girlfriend's diary in the car's back seat.

Did Gerson pore over every heart-felt page when he discovered Marla Maples' journal in 1991? Gerson would rather not say. Did he contact the tabloids and demand a hefty sum? Absolutely not.

He quietly called Maples' publicist and returned the journal.

Discretion and really long cars — those are hallmarks of a business that whisks wealthy people around town in estate-like privacy.

A peek into the world of back-seat bars and tinted windows and the names — either of driver or passenger — don't come easily. But the stories abound.

"Alan Thicke — he's very difficult to please," said one driver, speaking anonymously. Thicke once was host to a late-night talk show and now parodies such a host on the NBC sitcom, "Hope and Gloria."

"He refused to get into a car if it didn't have Diet Coke. Day, night, six o'clock in the morning — didn't matter."

"My drivers wouldn't drive him, so I had to farm him out."

Drinks — and other stimulants — are frequent limousine accessories.

Marijuana and liquor were de rigueur in the '70s. In the decadent '80s, clients seemed to swim in champagne and cocaine.

But now, it's fruit drinks and Evian, said Scott Solombrino, president of a worldwide limousine company.

Study focuses on airplane accidents

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Latin America has the world's highest rate of airplane landing accidents, while landings are safest in North America.

An analysis of accidents between 1984 and 1995 found that airports in Latin America averaged 32 accidents per million landings, the Flight Safety Foundation reported.

The report comes in the wake of a pair of deadly crashes by U.S. planes approaching airports.

On Dec. 20, 1995, an American Airlines Boeing 757 from Miami slammed into a mountain while trying to land in Cali, Colombia, killing 160 people.

And just last month Commerce Secretary Ron Brown and 34 others died when an Air Force CT-43 struck a hill while approaching the airport at Dubrovnik, Bosnia.

The final determination on the cause of those accidents has not been made.

Cockpit tapes reveal that the American Airlines crew became confused about their position and a language problem caused confusion between them and the ground controller. The Air Force crew was trying to land in a storm at an airport with only the most basic navigation aids.

Despite the fact that both those crashes involved striking mountains, the foundation study found no close correlation between high terrain around airports and landing accidents.

Close behind Latin America in danger were airports in Africa with 30 accidents per million landings.

By contrast, the Alexandria, Va.-based research organization found just four accidents per million landings in North America. Western Europe placed second on the safety list with nine accidents per million landings.

The accident rate per million landings was 11 in the Middle East, 18 in the Asia-Pacific region and 20 in Eastern Europe, site of the Ron Brown crash.

According to the study, factors enhancing landing safety include the availability of terminal approach radar and having precision guidance equipment available at airports.

REVIEW

'Twister' mixes natural havoc, human conflict

Associated Press

Have you ever seen a cow fly? Or watched an airborne tanker truck? How about a two-story house in flight?

These phenomena can be viewed in seeming reality in "Twister," a thrill-jammed adventure from the limitless imaginations of Steven Spielberg's production team and the wizardry of George Lucas' Industrial Light and Magic.

"Twister" bears impeccable credentials. The script comes from hitmaker Michael Crichton, collaborating for the first time with his wife, Anne-Marie Martin. It's an original, not based on a Crichton novel.

Jan de Bont directed the film with the same knack for relentless suspense he displayed in "Speed."

Crichton co-produced the film, along with Spielberg regular Kathleen Kennedy and De Bont's associate, Ian Bryce.

Spielberg appears among the four executive producers.

The story centers on a rag-tag bunch of university scientists who chase tornadoes through the southwest flatland, hoping to uncover nature's secrets.

Their leader is the fearless Jo Harding (Helen Hunt), whose zeal might stem from her childhood, when she lost her father to a storm's fury.

That is told in the prologue, which gets things off to a terrifying start.

Jo Harding's soon to be ex-boyfriend and former colleague Bill Harding (Bill Paxton) appears with divorce papers for her to sign.

Just then, the worst storm in 50 years starts brewing. Naturally, Bill can't resist going along on the chase.

Disaster movies require human conflict as well as natural havoc.

The Crichtons provide two:

First, Bill is accompanied by his fiancée, Melissa (Jami Gertz), who doesn't understand the dangerous pursuit of tornadoes or the foolhardy zeal of the scientists. A triangle develops, and you can guess the winners.

Second, Harding's gang is trailed by the unscrupulous Dr. Jonas Miller (Cary Elwes), who leads a well-financed team of scientists on the same mission.

In contrast to Harding's caravan of mismatched cars and trucks, Miller leads a half-dozen sleek vehicles, all black (get the symbolism?).

These dramatics do not challenge the mind, but they offer welcome relief from the nail-biting action from the skies.

The technology is impressive, these twisters being light-years removed from the one in "The Wizard of Oz" (appropriately, the device with which the scientists hope to chart a tornado's movement is named "Dorothy").

Hunt, best known for the TV sitcom "Mad About You," proves an excellent choice for the hard-driving leader of the pack. Paxton, the third astronaut in "Apollo 13," displays all the essentials of an action leading man.

"Twister" is a co-production of Warner Bros. and Universal Pictures, out of Spielberg's Amblin Entertainment.

The rating is PG-13; lots of scary stuff for youngsters. Running time: 104 minutes.

Urbanek said he estimates that 98 to 99 percent of the time the DPS machine is accurate in sorting mail.

Marvin Roth, Manhattan postmaster for 13 years, said the post office does experience some problems with DPS, but said the machines are helpful.

Problems have primarily been with hardware and software where it will lose memory, Roth said.

"It's just like a computer. It's only as smart as those who program it," Roth said.

■ LATE MAIL

Misdirected mail is not the only setback of the machines, Smith said. Late mail is also a problem.

"I brought back I'd say 200 letters today, and that's average," Smith said. "And out of those 200, 100 to 125 were first class, and all of those were delayed through no fault of mine."

Smith said part of the reason the mail is being delivered late is that mail carriers are getting to work an hour later because the machines can't get the mail sorted fast enough.

He said it's frustrating because from day one, mail carriers have been stressed to deliver mail on time and then the machines change their way of doing things.

However, Roth said mail carriers are arriving at work an hour later but still leaving the post office to start their routes at the same time.

He said mail volume is one characteristic that determines when a carrier can get out of the office. Also magazines, newspapers, large items and some mail that can't be read must be hand-sorted because they can't go through the DPS.

■ FRUSTRATION

Smith said there's a lot of frustration among mail carriers because the system is not working and management won't listen.

"They have people telling us how to do our job, and they've never carried mail," Smith said. "They want the public to think we're doing a fantastic job, and we're not. We could, but they won't let us."

Smith said post office officials are beginning to realize they've made a mistake and wasted millions of dollars.

"Management knows they screwed up big time, but the funny thing is they don't go to the people who do the job," Smith said. "They're trying to replace the carrier, but they can't — it's impossible."

However, Roth said he thinks the cost of the DPS machines was well worth the money spent on them because the chances for error are fewer.

He said it's difficult to prove the machines are worth the money now, but he said he can foresee the direction the post office is headed. People make mistakes, but machines don't make mistakes, Roth said.

The DPS machines are mass produced, and the cost of the first machines were in the hundred of thousands of dollars. As more machines were produced, the cost went into the tens of thousands of dollars, Roth said.

■ CARRIERS' ANGER BUILDS

Carl Urbanek, president of the National Association for Letter Carriers, Branch 1018, and mail carrier, said there are unhappy mail carriers because it's harder for mail carriers who have to walk their routes.

It's difficult for mail carriers to work with two to three bundles of mail at one time when they were used to carrying only two bundles at one time, he said. The average bundle of mail has between 75 and 100 pieces of mail.

"It's hard on the hands — especially when it's cold outside," Urbanek said.

Ken Olsen, supervisor of customer services, said some mail carriers are upset with having to work extra hours because they have to come to work later.

A few mail carriers complained about child-care problems because they're getting off work later, he said.

Roth said he thinks there are unhappy mail carriers partially because the DPS has disrupted the flow of how mail carriers used to do things. Roth said mail carriers had to go through a learning curve when the DPS system was first implemented.

He said it is no different from when society went from typewriters to computers.

■ CHANGES FOR CUSTOMERS

The main effect from DPS will be seen by customers, and this is only if it is pointed out to customers, Roth said.

The majority of customers probably haven't noticed any changes in mail delivery, he said.

Olsen said the postmaster has received a few phone calls from residents who wanted to know why the mail might be delivered at a later time after a notice was sent to postal customers.

Most area businesses have not experienced any noticeable delays in mail delivery.

Randy Martin, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said he was unaware of any changes with the mail delivery.

"We do an awful lot of mail here, and I can't see that there's any difference," he said.

The Chamber of Commerce has not received any complaints from area businesses about mail delivery, Martin said.

Vicki Gwartney, manager of Fashion Shop and Beauty Salon, said she has not noticed a drastic change in mail delivery. The mail is delivered within an hour time span, she said.

Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, said she has not noticed any changes with the mail delivery system.

The Aggieville Business Association uses box mail at the post office. The mail is supposed to be in the boxes by 9 a.m., and if it continues that way, there won't be a problem, Sieben said.

■ SOLUTIONS

Smith said there are some obvious solutions to solving the problems with the DPS machines.

Management should let mail carriers sort mail after the mail goes through DPS, he said.

"The only way they're going to get their money's worth is to let the carriers case it. Mail carriers can sort mail faster when it's basically in order," Smith said. "We're the last ones to catch mistakes."

He said one advantage of letting mail carriers case their routes is that a carrier knows everyone on the route, but DPS doesn't.

Another mail carrier, who wished to remain anonymous, said there probably are not any solutions because the post office is determined to make the DPS work.

"As mail carriers we don't really have an opinion," the source said.

The anonymous source said there are constant threats from management of the post office. The threats come in form of a warning letter, which could ultimately mean the end of your job. The source said some mail carriers have received warning letters for getting hurt on the job by accident, casing mail after it went through the DPS machines and getting in a wreck that was not their fault.

The results of DPS could be a reduction in the number of mail routes in Manhattan, Roth said.

There are 32 city routes, nine rural routes and one partial post route that delivers mail to K-State.

There are a number of factors that could enter into a decision to reduce the number of mail routes, Roth said.

If approved, the raise would follow a 6-percent increase scheduled to take effect in the coming fall semester at KU and K-State, and a 3-percent increase at the other four state universities — Wichita, Emporia, Fort Hays and Pittsburg.

Resident students at KU and K-State also absorbed a 7-percent increase in fall 1995, while those at WSU got a 5-percent increase and those at the three regional universities got a 3-percent increase. Non-resident students all paid 7-percent more last year.

The 3.5-percent increase for fall 1997 being recommended by the regents committee would generate $5.9 million in additional revenue.

Of that amount, $1.9 million would be used to purchase technology equipment; $667,000 would finance tuition equity adjustments at KU and K-State, and the other $3.3 million would go into the schools' general use base budgets.

Designating a third of the revenue for purchasing technology equipment

"is in recognition that technology education, and keeping the equipment up to date, is a high priority," Ray Hauke, regents' fiscal officer, said.

According to the proposed 1997-98 increase, resident undergraduate tuition at KU and K-State would rise from $63 per credit hour in fall 1996 to $65 in 1997, while tuition for resident graduate students would go from $94 to $97 per credit hour.

For non-residents at the state's two largest schools, the credit-hour rate would increase from $265 to $274 for undergrads and from $309 to $320 for graduate students.

TEENS

Lee County has been working for the past year with the United States.

Justice Department to find new ways to deal with teen criminals and stop first-time offenders from getting involved in more serious crime.

"This opens a whole new chapter in criminal justice," McDougall said.

"We all have to look at what their parents are going through and say, 'Could these be our kids?'"

Police said the teens admitted they had planned the "ultimate crime of chaos" for their Grad Night party at Walt Disney World.

There, they planned to mug Disney characters for their costumes and shoot black tourists.

McDougall said he doesn't believe this actually would have happened because of the tight security at Disney. But he does believe the teens would have resisted violently when caught.

"They were going to make a strong statement at Disney," the sheriff said. "It would have been a bloodbath."

The group's core members were arrested three days after Schwabes' slaying.

Police said they were on their way with pistols and a shotgun to rob a fast-food restaurant where two of them worked.

They were prepared to kidnap the manager and shoot anyone who tried to stop them, police said.

According to police, the crime spree began three weeks earlier on April 13.

GRAVES' ENDORSEMENT. Gov. Bill Graves is defending his endorsement of Lt. Sheila Frahm in the Republican primary for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Bob Dole.

U.S. Rep. Sam Brownback, the other candidate in the GOP race, called Graves' endorsement inappropriate and suggested he should stay neutral.

ARSON CONVICTION. Debora Green, the non-practicing doctor who pleaded no contest to charges that she killed two of her children in an arson fire in October, went to court for sentencing Thursday. Prosecutors were recommending a life sentence for Green, who agreed to a plea bargain to avoid a possible death penalty.

FINNEY FOR SENATE. Former Gov. Joan Finney confirms that she plans to run for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Bob Dole.

INTERNATIONAL

NETANYAHU WINS. With the last ballots counted and his narrowest of triumphs confirmed, Benjamin Netanyahu was elected the new, hard-line prime minister.

Netanyahu, 46, has promised to make security his top priority, slow the peace negotiations and renege on some of Peres' promises, such as withdrawing troops from the West Bank town of Hebron. In his first speech since winning last week's Israeli election, the hard-line leader sought to ease Mideast jitters over his victory by pledging to continue peace talks.

CEASE-FIRE. Russian troops and rebels in Chechnya entered a cease-fire Friday in a fragile pact to end the 17-month war in the breakaway republic.

MAD COW DISEASE. Five more people are thought to be suffering from a new strain of the fatal brain-wasting illness linked to "mad cow" disease in cattle. The 15-nation European Union imposed an export ban on British beef in March after the government announced a possible link between mad cow disease and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

NATO. A new NATO is switching focus. Foreign ministers from the 16-member North Atlantic Treaty Organization are expected to approve plans Monday for a more visible European role.

NATIONAL

BOMBING TRIAL. A judge rejected a defense motion to dismiss the death penalty for Oklahoma City bombing suspect Terry Nichols, saying no laws were broken when Attorney General Janet Reno said those responsible should be executed.

CURFEW FOR MINORS. President Clinton is embracing tough curfews to fight crime: Kids under 17 should be off the streets at 8 p.m. on school nights.

FREEMAN STAND-OFF. The FBI evicted the media from their point overlooking the Freeman compound, then turned on a portable generator that could be used to further isolate the anti-government fugitives.

Federal authorities said there were no immediate plans to cut power to the 960-acre ranch. Reporters and cameramen were ordered to leave Wednesday after a FOX network news crew arranged interviews with the Freemans without telling the government beforehand.

COP ARRESTED. A second suspect in the beating of a black man surrendered for questioning Saturday, while his lawyer says the attack — allegedly by a white New York City police officer and his friends — was self-defense.

WHITEWATER. An Arkansas jury returned guilty verdicts on 24 charges against Arkansas Gov. Jim Guy Tucker and two of Clinton's former Whitewater business partners.

NBA FINALS. The Seattle SuperSonics, led by their two young All-Stars, are going to the NBA Finals instead of the Utah Jazz and their two future Hall of Famers.

The Sonics won Game 7 of the Western Conference finals 90-86 Sunday, advancing to the NBA Finals for the first time since 1979 and erasing a legacy of playoff failure. Seattle will meet the Chicago Bulls in the finals beginning Wednesday night.

VOLLEYBALL. OSAKA, Japan (AP) — The United States, China, South Korea, the Netherlands, Japan and Ukraine will form Pool A in the Atlanta Olympic women's volleyball tournament, which will run from July 19 to Aug. 4, the international volleyball federation said Sunday. K-177 was recognized as one of the nation's prettiest drives

SCENIC ROUTE

AN OLD WATER pump stands next to the Lower Fox Creek School House near the Z Bar Ranch on Kansas Highway 177. A stretch of the highway between Manhattan and Cassoday was recently featured in a special travel issue published by the National Geographic Society.

Allison Woodall
staff reporter

The National Geographic Society has recognized a section of Kansas Highway 177 as a top national scenic highway.

K-177 is one of 200 routes named in National Geographic's Guide to National Scenic Highways and Byways.

K-177 is the only Kansas route mentioned.

The 84-mile section extends from Manhattan to Cassoday.

The selection process began by compiling thousands of possibilities, including federal and state highways, county and local routes and national parks.

The list was narrowed based on aesthetic and historic value and uniqueness.

Writers then drove every mile and reported what they saw.

K-177 travels through the Flint Hills and is noted for its view of the largest remaining tracts of tallgrass prairie in the United States.

The guide mentions Council Grove's historical significance as an important stop for travelers on the Santa Fe Trail.

Hays House restaurant in Council Grove is a recommended stopping place.

The drive also includes Chase County Courthouse, the state's oldest courthouse still in use.

The route ends in the ranching community of Cassoday, which bills itself as the prairie chicken capital of the world.

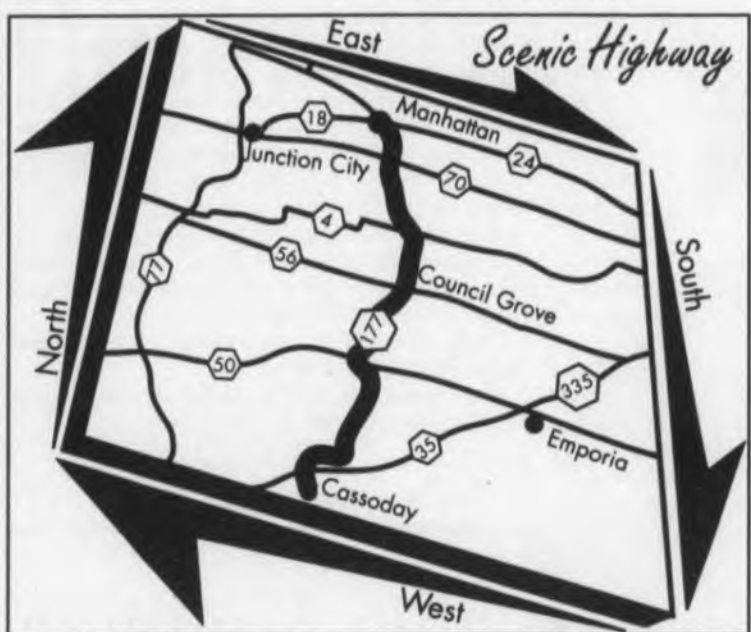

Cassoday also reintroduced the pronghorn into area wildlife.

The guide intends to serve as a mile-by-mile companion for those who enjoy driving for pleasure.

"In the current age of global living and virtual reality, many of us are ready to slow down and step backward a little in time," K.M. Kastyal said in the guide introduction. "And nothing seems to bring the world back to a personal dimension better than a drive down these scenic highways and byways."

The guide provides a basic drive outline including mileage, travel time required and recommended seasons to visit.

"Each byway has its own character, its own promise," Kastyal said. "But all of them will give you back that sense of adventure."

Speed kills

Data collected by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration suggests speeding is a bad idea.

● Thirty-two percent of drivers between the ages of 15 and 24 involved in fatal crashes were speeding.

● Forty percent of males between the ages of 15 and 24 involved in fatal crashes were speeding.

● Speed is a factor in 30 percent of all fatal crashes, killing an average of 1,000 Americans each month.

● Speed was a factor in nearly 12,500 fatalities in 1994.

Campaign promotes safe driving

Renee Fisher
staff reporter

A national campaign to promote safe driving is starting today with a service announcement on MTV.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) is promoting its message through an effort called "Speed Shatters Life." The campaign targets speeding drivers and emphasizes the importance of following posted limits.

The message from NHTSA is one that the Riley County Police Department hopes will be noticed.

"Speed has been a factor in almost all of the fatality accidents recently," Sgt. Larry Freeby, traffic patrol supervisor for the RCPD, said.

Freeby said the motorcycle accident at Denison and Anderson avenues that killed K-State student Eric Dupuis involved excessive speed.

"The fact was the motorcycle was a half-block away and accelerated rapidly to beat the light," Freeby said.

Phil Aigner, a contractor who put the campaign together, said he hoped the message would reach a wide range of people.

"The intent is that this campaign will reach the level of the impaired-driving campaign or the Vince-and-Larry crash-test dummies campaign," Aigner said.

The message will be communicated in both English and Spanish and carried by MTV as well as newspapers and radio stations nationwide.

Same-sex unions banned; civil rights denied to gays

DAN
Lewerenz

News from Washington — the House approved a bill last week that would make interracial marriages unrecognized. Though states may pass laws sanctioning interracial marriages, the House bill permits states to ignore interracial marriages performed in another state. Don't worry. Congress has not gone that far — not quite.

But the House did approve a bill preventing legal recognition of gay marriages. Senator Don Nickles, R-Okla., has introduced a similar bill in the Senate.

Though President Clinton has criticized Republicans for using the issue to fan homophobic tendencies in an election year, he has also pledged to sign the bill should it come to his desk.

If the bill becomes law, it will be the greatest affront to civil liberties since Loving v. Virginia overturned that state's prohibition against interracial marriages in the 1960s.

Proponents of the measure, from Clinton to Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole to conservative icon William Bennett, argue it is not about bigotry or homophobia. Rather, it is a defense of tradition for a universally recognized cultural practice.

They are only half right. Marriage is a universal (or nearly universal) practice, but the fear of homosexuality that leads Western culture to prohibit same-sex marriages is not universal.

The movement against recognizing gay marriages becomes even more questionable when paired with the concept of common-law marriage.

The courts have consistently found long-time, live-in lovers to be married under common law, an unwritten code dating back to preindustrial England.

Common-law partners can get special legal consideration when determining inheritance, Social Security and other benefits, even if the relationship was not monogamous.

Prohibiting gay marriages, on the other hand, denies these same legal rights to people who intend to live together monogamously.

Despite the recent Supreme Court ruling striking down Colorado's Amendment 2, a state constitutional amendment prohibiting local governments from enacting homosexual civil rights protections, America insists on holding a double standard for its gay citizens.

We tell our children to abstain from sex before marriage and to maintain only monogamous sexual relationships. Then we tell a segment of the population they cannot play that game with us, that they are not following the rules.

In an age in which sexually transmitted diseases are spreading exponentially, and AIDS is becoming increasingly prevalent in the heterosexual population, we cannot afford to let irrational fear overcome reason.

It is reasonable to encourage abstinence. It is reasonable to encourage monogamy.

It is unreasonable, indefensible, bigoted and dangerous to deny homosexuals the right to marry.

No agenda set for opinion page, just diverse viewpoints

OK. So here I am. The opinion page editor. Ready to stuff the Collegian with all kinds of liberal propaganda in my attempt to brainwash this campus into becoming tree-huggers, Democrats, marijuana smokers and dolphin lovers.

Just kidding.

But seriously ... (wasn't that a Phil Collins album in the early '80s? I don't know, it is all such a blur ...) I was at an interview the other day, and the man saw that I would be opinion editor for the next few semesters. He asked if I had any agenda for the opinion page for the upcoming semesters.

Coming from a man who probably interviews hundreds of people a year as part of his job, I thought this was kind of a dumb question — not that I do not have the utmost respect for him, and I would not be more than happy to work for his newspaper.

But really, I mean, think about it ...

This is the opinion page, not the Sera page, but I hear Kevin Klassen, the fall editor in chief, might be considering having one next semester.

Lucky for all you folks, this summer's opinion page will be contributed to by four regular columnists, a few guest columnists, editorial board members and whoever writes a letter to the editor. They all have differing opinions — some of them left, some right and some happy mediums.

I guess you could say my only agenda is to achieve diversity. I just want diversity in opinion.

I have worked on the Collegian for almost three years (gulp!), but I have never been opinion editor, so if you have any suggestions for me, get in touch with me through e-mail, or call me at the Collegian.

If you have a gripe, complaint, bitch or any other kind of opinion about the Collegian, the University, the city, the state, the country or the world, this is the place to express it. Write me a letter. Do not feel obligated to be negative in your letters, either. If you think we are doing a good job, let us know, too.

Some other things I want to review you all on are the different sections of the opinion page. I know every opinion editor in the history of Collegian opinion editors has said this, but every semester we get some nimrod who mixes it up and yells at us.

■ Column These usually have little pictures of the people who wrote them over them. They express the opinion of the writer only. They do not express the opinion of the Collegian, Student Publications Inc. or the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications. Got it?

I realize you might get mad at some things some columnists write, but do not call the Collegian to yell at whomever answers the phone. It is not his or her fault. Write a letter to the editor, or send the writer some e-mail.

■ Editorial This is the box marked "Collegian Viewpoint."

It is a compilation of the opinions of all the editors on the Collegian and the Collegian editorial board.

■ Letters to the editor These are the letters that you all write to me to do all the stuff I mentioned above. You can either e-mail me, or you can bring them to Kedzie 116.

Make sure that when you write your letters you start them with "Dear Editor." It's a legal thing that we have to do to make sure you all don't sue us.

Also, if you drop them off at Kedzie, be sure to bring a picture ID.

OK. That should cover it. If you have any further questions about the opinion page or any of its general goings-on, e-mail me at (karolyi@ksu.ksu.edu), or call me at the Collegian, 532-6556.

You will probably be hearing from me from time to time during the next few months. Until then, have a great summer, and keep those letters to the editor coming.

Ovens, muffins and stress in dem Sommer to live with.

A summer with these ingredients is like an oven that is just too hot. Like these blueberry muffins I made today.

This was kind of an experiment, you see. I got this really cheap, easy-to-fix blueberry muffin mix and decided today was the day to try it out.

Two-thirds of a cup of water, two egg whites, two tablespoons of shortening and a lot of stirring later, I had me some muffin dough. It got put into the greased-up muffin pan and placed in the preheated 425-degree oven.

I was really hungry at this point. I decided the 25 minutes it took to bake these muffins was just too long to wait for food, so I ripped open a package of oriental-flavored ramen noodle mix (in an equally easy-to-fix package). At this time I was about a third of the way into cooking my muffins and still hungry.

I proceeded to microwave the water necessary to cook the dried noodles. The noodle preparation did not go smoothly, and by the time I had fixed them, I smelled something peculiar.

I thought it was the neighbors; I usually smelled strange things coming from them anyway. Yet moments later I remembered the 27-minute-old muffins. I hopped to the oven and ripped it open to see the nine slightly burnt blueberry muffins.

Where is this story going? The oven is nicely analogous to semester after semester of school. As the dough is baked, so are our brains. As the muffins turn "golden brown" (like the instructions say), our brains become more "well-rounded" (like the K-State student handbook says).

Have you had your muffins burnt? I tell you, after enough residence hall food, linear tuition, K-State Union Bookstore return policies and drop/add signatures, even the squirrels are starting to look like they could break.

But please do not leave this story with the idea that all I can do is point out problems — anyone can do that. My observations do come with solutions.

When you feel you have solved your last equation, when you feel like you cannot read another act of that Shakespeare fellow, when the pressures of day-to-day existence seem to extinguish any hope of sanity, remember this: Pressure sucks.

If you are doing something you really do not care for much, just imagine some time in the future when you get to do that which gives you reason to wake up in the morning.

Whether it is a spouse, a group of friends, a particular pastime or even a good book, it is these things that can relieve the inevitable pressures in this crock pot we call life.

So on with summer school! Let this summer be a fun one and not a forced one.

collegian VIEWPOINT

Be nice to high school students

You might have noticed that campus has been invaded by blue jackets and is a bit more crowded than you expected for this summer.

High school students from all around Kansas representing FFA, Future Homemakers of America, Boys State and tons of other organizations are retreating to K-State.

Sometimes this can seem like a little bit of an inconvenience. Parking spaces might be harder to find, and people might be wandering around the K-State Student Union oblivious to the fact that they are in everyone's way.

But these high school organizations represent an incredible recruiting opportunity to K-State. If these students like the campus and the people and have an enjoyable experience here, they might want to return here for four more years. Their return represents more revenue for K-State.

Not that these people only represent

Visits from high school organizations represent a huge recruiting opportunity for the University.

polite to these organizations and their members.

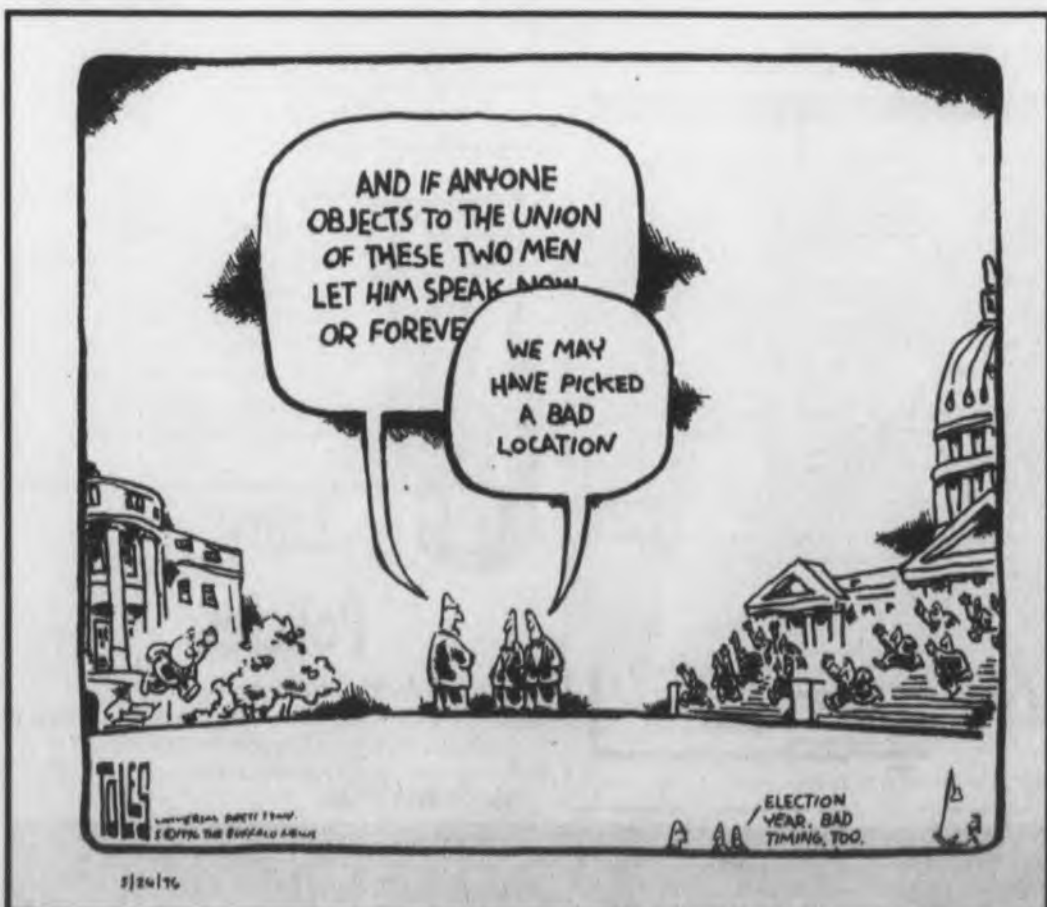

So next time you see some lost souls in blue jackets, instead of snickering to your buddy about the stupid high school students, why not ask where they are headed and give them directions or take them to their destination?

Remember you were there once, too. Remember when K-State just seemed like a huge campus, and you did not know the difference between Denison Hall and Dole Hall?

Be friendly to them. Answer their questions. Be patient. Remember that these high school students, who might seem like more of an annoyance than anything else, represent potential K-Staters.

Wildcats finish '96 campaign at final Big 8 Tournament

John Berggren
sports writer

K-State's 1996 baseball campaign fell short of its coaches', fans' and even players' expectations.

After a 29-24 finish in the 1995 season by a team that skeptics thought would be hard-pressed to finish at .500, this year was predicted by many to be a banner season for the Wildcats.

The Cats finished this year's season at 28-26 after losing their first two games of the Big 8 Tournament. Oklahoma State handed the Cats a heartbreaking 10-4 loss in the first round to send K-State to the loser's bracket, where it would face Kansas. The Jayhawks eliminated the floundering Cats from the tournament with a 14-4 slapping.

Oklahoma State went undefeated in the tournament, and its first-round contest with K-State was the closest opponents would come to toppling the powerhouse Cowboys.

Round two for the Cats started out badly from the get-go when the scheduled starting pitcher, Eric Yanz, complained of a sore arm. Jon Oiseth stepped up in Yanz's place, giving up nine runs in his 3-1/3 innings of work. Only three of the nine runs were earned.

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said the outcome of the second game had a lot to do with the finish of the Oklahoma State contest.

Clark

"Everything just seemed to revolve around what happened in the first game," Clark said. "A lot of little things went wrong, and they just kept building on us."

After a late first-round contest, the Cats had to be back on the field to play an early second-round game only 12 hours from the end of the initial game.

k.c. ROYALS

• Royals 7, Blue Jays 5.

• Who's Hot. Tim Belcher earns the win to improve to 100-92 in his career. Craig Paquette, Bob Hamelin and Joe Vitiello each hit two-run homers for the Royals, who entered the game with just 34 homers. Mike Macfarlane extended his hitting streak to a career-high 11 games with a single in the second.

• Who's Not. Michael Tucker has just three hits in his last 31 at-bats. The Blue Jays have not swept the Royals since they took a two-game set April 19-20, 1988 at Exhibition Stadium.

Everything just seemed to revolve around what happened in the first game. A lot of little things went wrong, and they just kept building on us.

Apocalypse has arrived in KC

Welcome back, K-State faithful, and welcome to another semester of Wildcats sports.

As you can see, K-State athletics have been busy in your absence. Baseball tournaments, track and field championships, Big 12 conferences — all have transpired while you were either reclining beside a pool, traveling to exotic places (like home) or, better yet, keeping track of the NBA and NHL playoffs.

So sit right back and you'll hear a tale, a tale of a fateful trip ... oh, wait — I got carried away. But now that I've gotten myself started, what about those Royals. Talk about a fateful trip.

If any of you remember my columns from last semester, I did not really speak either way on the boys in Kansas City. There was a reason for that — I had no room to speak.

My wonderful life here at the Collegian does not fuel my pocketbook well enough to afford nights at the

Myview

SHANA

Memorial Day weekend I not only took in a Royals game, but I took in two of them. On Sunday, I saw the Royals lose to Texas in a close game. On Monday night, Kansas City added to Detroit's woes by slapping another mark in the loss column for the Tigers. Poor Cecil.

I was sitting there at Kauffman Stadium, and quite a few things struck me, so I'll break my silence on the Royals. I'll speak.

What did I notice? Advertising signs. Pepsi signs, Price Chopper signs, Thompson dog food signs, Budweiser beer signs — they decorated the outfield walls and the bullpen walls. Or maybe "destroyed" would be a better word to use here.

Kauffman Stadium is such a beautiful ballpark. With fountains that burst into action during each half-inning, a meticulously manicured field, carefully groomed infield, and well-maintained stadium, the "K" is a taken-for-granted treasure in Kansas City. Then, to ruin the beauty with the ugliness of advertising.

There I was, in the middle of the first inning, sitting in left-field general admission.

I turned to my little sister and said, "Look at that. I haven't been here since last season, but I think that advertising is new. What a shame."

Ten minutes later the man behind me turned to his son and said practically the same thing. I turned around and we confirmed to each other that the advertising indeed was new, at least to Kansas City.

I felt like I was at a minor-league ballpark, a field that needed revenue to sustain itself.

Those advertising signs on the outfield walls were a clear reminder of the financial troubles the Kansas City front office was having. To fall to the point where the sale of advertising space is needed is a sure sign of an illness. That illness is defacing baseball.

The ugliness goes far beyond that of mismatching color schemes and uneven symmetry. Those advertisements symbolize the apocalypse that is befalling major-league baseball. I am not saying the sport itself is going to die or that major-league baseball will expire. But it is most definitely in a slump that no player can work out of alone. It is going to take everyone concerned to save baseball — coaches, players, owners and, yes, even the fans.

And you know what? The Royals are not doing that badly. Sure, they are not doing that well, either. But if the fans do not go to the games and support the team, ol' Herk Robinson is going to keep selling off those players who are showing such promise. Believe me, the promise is there. Let's just hope Kansas City does not decide to find more money by cutting payroll even further than it has this season.

The times they are a changin'

■ The Big 8 conference ends June 30, and the Big 12 begins July 1. Member institutions have begun to make the necessary changes

Dan Lewerenz
sports writer

When athletic and university administrators from Big 12 member institutions met May 20-23 in Colorado, it was anything but big news.

Maybe the most exciting things to come from the mountains were quirky quotes from football coaches.

That does not mean nothing was accomplished. In fact, administrators squared away several matters imperative for the start of conference competition next year.

"It was a lot of tedious work, a lot of reading over material," Cindy Fox, K-State assistant athletic director and senior women's administrator, said. "But it was stuff that had to be done."

The primary issue facing athletic directors was initial eligibility of NCAA partial qualifiers, students who meet some but not all of the NCAA's academic eligibility guidelines. Big 8 schools had allowed partial qualifiers, but the Southwest Conference, former home to Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor, did not.

Although most Big 8 coaches and athletic directors favored allowing partial qualifiers, league chief executive officers elected to allow only four partial qualifiers per year — one each in football, men's basketball, women's basketball and any other women's sport. Most other business was handled by the league's SWAs.

"The senior women's administrators handle all issues except football and men's basketball," Fox said.

"So what we did was all the coaches in the league met and got together administrative suggestions for their sports."

"We went through those suggestions and took out some things that weren't necessary and implemented

"It was a lot of tedious work, a lot of reading over material. But it was stuff that had to be done."

the things they did need to do."

One other issue finalized by league administrators was a deal with Liberty/Prime Sports to televise 20 regular-season women's basketball games plus the tournament semifinals and final.

Liberty/Prime will also televise 10 other Big 12 sporting events to be determined at a later date.

Out of the old ... Into the new Issues resolved at the May 20-23 conference of Big 12 athletic and university administrators.

■ Men's and women's basketball schedules, still under revision, will mirror each other (i.e. when the men play at home against Texas, the women will play at Texas).

■ Volleyball matches within the conference will be played on Friday and Saturday nights.

■ Golf will not have junior varsity teams.

■ Baseball will be in a round-robin format without divisions. The Big 12 Tournament will invite only the top six teams.

Few disappointments stick out in K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto's mind after his team's performance in the Big 8 Track and Field Championships held May 21-22 in Lincoln, Neb.

"The teams ended up the way I expected them to," Rovelto said. "Some people did some very good things."

Placing third overall with 118 points, the women's team captured three first-place finishes, while the men's team effort landed the squad in sixth place with 60 points.

"If we had performed to our absolute best, the men's team could have been fifth," Rovelto said. "Point-wise, fifth was exactly the way I thought it would be, but I'm happy with the team's effort."

With the Big 8 meet being the last chance to qualify for the NCAA outdoor championships May 29-June 1, Lincoln became a do-or-die situation for some near-miss athletes.

Despite winning the 400-meter dash, junior Belinda Hope's time fell short of the qualifications to make the trip to Oregon.

"It was a letdown. I kept thinking, 'I have to do it here,' and I think that hurt me," Hope said.

Hope said it was especially hard because she had come so close throughout the year.

"It was a big disappointment. Next year, I'm going to take a much more positive attitude, and with the competition being better in the Big 12 conference, I should get there," Hope said.

Senior Irma Betancourt and junior Staci Lowe said they felt the same letdown. Each won her individual event but also fell short of the requirements.

"We have some athletes who we thought could get there that didn't. But to be real honest, Belinda is the person who belongs in the championships," Rovelto said. "If she would have made it, she would be very capable of placing well."

After the Big 8 meet, Rovelto was able to advance six athletes to Oregon.

However, one all-America hopeful, high-jumper Wanita Dykstra, may not fare as well in Oregon as expected.

After the Big 8 meet, Dykstra was diagnosed with mononucleosis. "Wanita hasn't been feeling good physically since the Drake Relays," Rovelto said. "Even though we didn't get the diagnosis till recently, she's on the tail end of it now."

Rovelto said because of her increase in fatigue, he had slowed down the intensity of her training. "We did back off a lot in her training, and she's been good about diet and resting. Hopefully this won't affect her performance too much. She has lost a lot of strength," Rovelto said.

With most of the season behind him, Rovelto looks ahead to the future of his squad and the conference.

"Our women's team ended up ranked fourth

K-State athletes at the NCAA Track and Field Championships in Eugene, Ore.

• Itai Margalit, high jump
• Renetta Seiler, discus throw
• Wanita Kinard, triple jump
• Wanita Dykstra, high jump
• Travis Livingston, hurdles
• Anna Whitlam, javelin

nationally in final dual rankings and our men 14th," he said.

"The Big 12 will make things so competitive. It will be an outstanding conference with outstanding athletes. On the men's side we will have to recruit more elite athletes."

■ At press time, results from the NCAA tournament included K-State senior Itai Margalit jumping 7'2-1/2" in men's high jump to place third.

In the women's triple jump, Wanita Kinard placed fourth with a leap of 44'2". Junior sprinter Travis Livingston failed to advance to finals.

REMEMBERING LEARY

Messiah of LSD takes his last trip Friday

Even though he died Friday, Timothy Leary, a '60s revolutionary and former K-State speaker can still be seen on the World Wide Web. Point your browser to (<http://www.leary.com>).

Page Getz
staff writer

Psychedelic pilgrim and '60s revolutionary Timothy Leary died Friday at the age of 75, pursuing his last goal to "give death a better name or die trying."

In January 1995 Leary, who spoke at K-State in March, was diagnosed with terminal prostate cancer, but he embraced his inevitable death as an opportunity for spiritual growth.

Even with his exit, he was still stirring controversy among both cyber gossipers and the press with the approach of his much-publicized death.

But a lethal dose of cancer was not enough to slow him down.

At the time of his death Leary was in the process of writing two books, a sequel autobiography to "Flashbacks and Confessions of a Hope Fiend" and a how-to book on dying titled "The Ultimate Trip: A Manual for Designer Dying."

Among philosophies on the pre-hereafter included in the unfinished book, Leary discussed how death has been given a bad rap and is underrated, stressing that 80 percent of Americans' health-care spending occurs within the last six months of life.

"The key to dying well is for you to decide where, when, how and whom to invite to the last party," he said.

Although the hyper-eccentric Leary had been planning a "cyber-suicide" to be available on the World Wide Web, instead he spent his last months opening his home and his homepage to followers and critics.

Among visitors to his extended psychedelic open-casket shindig were Oliver Stone, Yoko Ono, Perry Farrel, Michelle Phillips, Ram Dass, members of Ministry, Susan Sarandon and Tim Robbins.

Leary's death bed included a red lava lamp, a computer and a tank of nitrous oxide, just one of an extensive menu of mind-altering drugs that made up his daily diet until his departure.

In a lecture to a full house at McCain Auditorium in March 1995, Leary's attitude toward aging was equally casual and positive as he compared senility to being really stoned.

Response to his lecture on campus was equally mixed.

"Through most of his life, whether he was right or wrong, I think he was consistently misunderstood," said Jason Hamilton, senior in creative writing, who attended the lecture.

"I think most people thought that he was incoherent when he spoke here," he said.

"He got a lot of irresponsible media coverage, and people misrepresented him as being irresponsibly hedonistic," he said.

Known once as the "Messiah of LSD," many critics believe his significance was exaggerated and that he was no more than a corrupter of the youth or an overage stoner.

"Timothy Leary was fired from Harvard and treated like a loony largely because he recommended that everybody should trip on acid," Dave Rowland, senior in philosophy, said.

"But those of us who have tried acid know that he wasn't crazy," he said.

His death marks the passing of another of the threads of a generation's voice that has been fading with the deaths of others like Jerry Garcia and Frank Zappa.

One by one their deaths threaten to leave us and future generations deprived of their message and unable to recognize their contributions.

The U.S. Army is coming to McCain Auditorium tonight.

The United States Army Soldier Show will invade the stage with music and dancing at 7:30.

Featuring 25 performers and technicians from Army units around the world, the cast and crew include two soldiers from Fort Riley.

Specialist Belinda Parraz, a performer, and Corporal Jessica Diaz, the stage manager, were both stationed at Fort Riley before they were assigned to the Soldier Show.

With musical numbers representing rock, country, show tunes and R&B, the Soldier Show aims to appeal to a broad spectrum of audience members.

The theme for the show reflects multiculturalism: "We are many, we are one."

Admission to the show is free and seating is first-come, first-serve, but civilians must wait for Army personnel to be seated before finding a seat.

The performers and technicians come from a variety of positions in the Army, with combat medics, supply technicians, mechanics, flight operators, missile crew members and military police represented in the cast and crew of the production.

The group is on tour to entertain soldiers stationed all over the world and even has a tentative engagement to perform for the troops in Bosnia.

Rep. Pat Roberts, from the first district, filed for Kassebaum's seat May 31. "Kansas has been blessed with Bob Dole and Nancy Kassebaum's leadership in the Senate. With their departure, we must retain our state's senior standing as much as possible," Roberts said.

With congressional races gearing up for the summer, Kansas face a short three months as a special election was called for Aug. 6.

Because time allowed little campaigning, Brownback proposed a series of weekly debates between him and opponent Frahm.

"This is the best way to keep this an issue-based, positive campaign," Brownback said.

Frahm, in a letter to Brownback, turned down the offer to debate, citing scheduling conflicts.

"I would, however, like to discuss at a later date an opportunity to meet in public forum, the date and place to be to our mutual agreement," Frahm said in her letter.

The Brownback camp responded by saying the people of Kansas deserve a debate.

"The people of Kansas deserve this discussion, and we are confident that public pressure will build to the point that they get the debate they deserve," Brownback said in his response to Frahm's letter.

Senate. "To be precedes before doing. You must be a good speaker before you can give a good speech," Brownback said.

Also, he looked back on his life. "It's not the goals you set. It's the accomplishments, the journey, the people I met is what it made me today," Brownback said.

Raised on a four-generation farm in Parker, Brownback was exposed to agriculture prior to his FFA involvement.

"FFA exposed me to many areas such as leadership development. It puts you in touch of people. At the time Congressman Joe Skubitz, which is now retired, inspired me that if you want to do this you can, but if you don't want it then you will not get it," he said.

Brownback defined FFA as nation-building because it develops people.

Proficiency awards are based on growth of project, FFA activities, other school activities and, most importantly, skills and knowledge of projects.

"It's a good motivator for students to specialize in areas beyond high school. I've seen a lot of winners enter in the business they won their proficiency in," Kingston said.

Angie Stump, graduate in agriculture journalism, is a prime example.

"I won the State Beef Proficiency in 1992. When I was 7 years old my grandfather gave me my first heifer. Over the years it taught me responsibility and gave me the opportunities to increase my knowledge. I then went a step further with my leadership skills — the FFA," she said.

Chapter awards are based on activities the chapter has carried out through the year. Developing student leadership, community, chapter and school leaves it wide open to many areas.

Stars Over Kansas was awarded Friday night to Michael Springer as Star Farmer and Nathan Schaeffer as Star in Agribusiness.

The Triple Crown Award, given to the top FFA chapter in the state, was presented to the Clay Center chapter.

Past FFA members can remember the Triple Crown Award being based on Building Our Agriculture Communities. The new criteria for this award is based on membership, community and chapter development.

Audrey Alexander, vice president, and Sheylene Hoyle, president of the 68-member Clay Center FFA, described the requirements for applying for the Triple Crown award.

Both retiring chapter officers will be attending K-State in the fall.

"It's like a machine if all the parts are working. There are 15 committees set up in the chapter. Every member assigns themselves to a committee and works as a team to benefit the entire chapter.

"As far as membership, I would like to add that it has increased over the last five years with the agriscience addition. We were thrilled to be recognized as the Triple Crown winner, because there was a lot of excellent chapters in competition for this award," Bohnenblust said.

About 6 p.m. Saturday, officers stopped four men after receiving a report of drug dealing in the street.

Three men stayed with the officers, but another fled. He was tackled by an officer but got away and pointed a gun at the officer.

The officer shot him, resulting in minor injuries.

By 8:15 p.m., the crowd had formed to confront about 20 officers who had converged on the scene.

The crowd fell back as the officers marched up the street, but about three dozen people, most of them young black men, charged back at the officers, throwing rocks and bottles.

Police threw four smoke bombs, then retreated to a command post.

Miss Manhattan sets sights on Miss Kansas title Saturday

J.C. Ashley
staff reporter

Alicia Shaneyfelt, senior in theater and Miss Manhattan 1996, will be scrutinized by all of Kansas on Saturday.

Shaneyfelt will participate in the 1996 Miss Kansas Scholarship Pageant in Pratt.

She has lived under the scrutiny of Manhattan since becoming Miss Manhattan in October.

"There's not a day since I won (Miss Manhattan) that I haven't thought about this pageant," Shaneyfelt said, "and I still get goose bumps when I think about what I'm about to do."

If she wins this pageant, she will go on to compete with women from across the country in the Miss America Pageant.

"Oh, if I win, I'll panic! Better women than me have won," Shaneyfelt said. "It's unbelievable to see these women's careers after they win. They're so driven to excellence, and they're in the eyes of everyone."

For Shaneyfelt, this is no new feeling. She has competed in nine pageants since her first Miss Manhattan Pageant in 1992, including Miss Eastern Kansas, Miss Greater Kansas City and Miss Junction City.

"As a high school senior, I was a bit embarrassed about the pageants. I would hide the fact that I liked the competition and wanted to win from my friends," Shaneyfelt said.

Shaneyfelt has had some time to prepare for the Miss Kansas Pageant and remind herself what it has taken to get there.

"I have been working with an interview coach from Texas. At first I was kind of reluctant because I'm not really some Polly Pageant," Shaneyfelt said.

"He knew I wasn't the typical pageant girl, but he took me past that and showed me how to be more assertive in my speaking and accomplish what I want to with my words. These are skills that anyone can use," Shaneyfelt said.

In reminding herself what it has

STAND FOR CHILDREN

Topeka to be site of stand for traditional family values

Hundreds of families will gather at the Kansas Statehouse in Topeka from 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday for Kansas Stand for Children.

Kansas Children's Service League, a non-profit organization, and more than 50 state and community organizations are sponsoring the event.

Like the National Stand for Children, in Washington, D.C., last week, Kansas Stand for Children is for anyone who wants to get more involved for children but does not know where to start.

"The purpose of Kansas Stand for Children is to raise a level of visibility that will then inspire people to become involved. There will be organizations there that will be able to provide opportunities for people to take action," Melissa Ness, director of public policy for Kansas Children's Service League, said.

Young people, seniors and Kansans from every walk of life will be attending the event.

Information will be available on child and family services in every Kansas community. It will be a non-partisan event with no political speakers.

The event will include speeches, family entertainment, food and an opportunity to network with other families.

Among the scheduled speakers are David White of Youth Opportunities Unlimited and Jim Caccama of Partnership for Children.

In addition, a few local celebrity athletes are expected to speak at the event, but names have not been confirmed at this time.

Dodie Lacey, event coordinator, said, "The choices we make now will shape our children's future and the future of our state and nation."

Dole tells staff good bye, begins farewell week

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bob Dole firmed up his plans to leave the Senate next Tuesday — "One o'clock. After lunch" — and then used a typical wisecrack to begin saying a long goodbye to the place he has worked for 35 years.

Surveying 175 of his current and former staffers gathered on the Capitol steps for a class photo, the outgoing Senate majority leader said, "Gosh — do you all work for me? A lot of money..."

The upbeat group cheered and broke into chants of "Dole '96" as tourists hustled to take snapshots in Tuesday's bright sun. Dole recognized Ruth Ann Komarek, manager of his Kansas Senate office, saying "she wins the prize" as his longest-serving employee at 30 years.

"What's the prize?" Komarek asked Dole, who was first elected to Congress in 1961.

"The prize is the White House," Dole replied, again to cheers.

The certain Republican presidential nominee was typically terse in finally setting the date of his resignation from the Senate.

He put a finger to his lips as if telling a secret and confided to reporters: "Tuesday. One o'clock. After lunch."

He later modified that time frame a little in brief remarks to his staff, telling them he'd make it official between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. After that, he said, "We'll see you out on the (campaign) trail."

After a wave and a thumbs-up to the tourists, Dole turned to his staffers and said simply, "Thanks a lot."

Later Tuesday, Dole held an hour-long reception in his majority leader's office for the Capitol Hill press corps, posing for pictures with many of them and greeting many by first names.

"The years go by quickly," Dole said. Returning to Washington after a trip to Michigan on Monday, Dole had ventured to the back section of his campaign plane to invite reporters who had covered his Senate years to the reception.

Asked if he had any sad feelings, Dole said, "Some. You know, I kind of like the place. I like to legislate. But I really sort of feel freed up. I feel good about it, more relaxed."

At a closed-door Senate GOP caucus Tuesday, Dole was paid a visit by former President Ford and former Majority Leader Howard Baker.

Dole presented Ford with a cake with "Dole-Ford" inscribed on top along with a likeness-in-frosting of the 1976 running mates.

"We've changed the ticket in 1996," Dole quipped during a photo session. "I'm going to be the front man. He's going to be the other guy."

Dole announced May 15 that he would resign from the Senate to campaign full-time for the presidency. His Senate replacement, Lt. Gov. Sheila Frahm, will be sworn in next Tuesday.

Clinton to testify by videotape during 2nd round of trials

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — President Clinton will have to testify by videotape in another Whitewater-related trial, a federal judge ruled Tuesday. U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright granted the motion made by an attorney for one of two bankers set to go on trial in Little Rock June 17.

The videotaped deposition, requested by Dan Guthrie, attorney for Herby Branscum Jr., is tentatively scheduled for July 7 at the White House.

Branscum and Robert Hill, owners of the Perry County Bank of Perryville, were indicted Feb. 20 on charges of conspiracy, misapplication of bank funds, falsifying bank records and making false statements about whether the bank reported transactions of $10,000 or more as required by law.

Baker team selected as one of six finalists in national food contest

Biscuit Bakes, a food product that started as a class project, has led a team of K-State students to New Orleans.

The team will participate in a competition sponsored by the Institute of Food Technologists at its annual convention the last week in June.

The team consists of seven students from foods and nutrition, animal science and industry, and grain science and industry. All team members belong to the Food Science Club.

Originally, 14 schools entered the competition, but only six were chosen as finalists.

"This is the first time K-State made it to the finals of the competition," JoEllen Deters, graduate student in food science and team member, said.

The competition, which takes place over two days, consists of four parts. On Sunday morning three team members make their presentation, but the actual tasting does not come until the afternoon.

"The judges are food scientists, so they are pretty experienced when it comes to what they want in the product," Deters said.

Monday morning each team participates in a poster presentation. The team is given an area, 4 feet by 6 feet, to show graphic representation of how it developed its product.

"We plan to hang eight to 12 small computer-generated posters," Deters said.

The actual announcement of the winning product comes late Monday.

Following the competition, the team plans to stay for the convention.

"It's a huge, huge trade show with all the latest equipment and ingredients,"

Veterans convention to start this weekend

Tom Roesler
staff reporter

The Kansas State Council of the Vietnam Veterans of America is holding the first Vietnam Veterans of America state convention on June 8 in Junction City.

Opening ceremonies will be held at the Kansas State Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Heritage Park at the intersection of Sixth and Washington streets.

This Memorial was chosen as the site because it became the official Kansas Vietnam Memorial through legislation passed in 1993.

The convention will include a ceremony to remember the Kansans who died in Vietnam.

Chapter presidents will conduct a wreath-laying ceremony, and a firing squad will present a salute to Vietnam veterans killed in action.

Junction City mayor Mike Rhodes will attend.

"The ceremony is to pay tribute to those who have fallen in Vietnam from Kansas," said Gerald Curtis, president of the Kansas State Council of the Vietnam Veterans of America.

Following the opening ceremony, the convention will move to a meeting at the American Legion Post #45 at 201 E. Fourth St.

BOSNIA ELECTION. Western powers are pressing ahead with plans to hold elections in Bosnia in September even though most Bosnians believe a vote will divide rather than unite their country. Only a flare-up in the war could postpone the ballot, the U.S. official overseeing the election said Monday.

MEXICAN DROUGHT. The cactus is the only food cattle have left from a deadly drought, the worst in nearly half a century and part of a greater natural disaster stretching all the way north to Kansas. The impact of the drought is greater in Mexico because the country's farming system has been in trouble for years and the social safety net is far smaller than in the American heartland.

U.S. PILOTS SHOT DOWN. A mechanical problem may have caused a Japanese destroyer, aiming at a target being towed by a U.S. attack bomber, to instead shoot the plane out of the sky during war games, a Japanese navy official said.

The two U.S. Navy aviators aboard the aircraft ejected and were rescued by the Japanese vessel Yuugiri, which had shot them down with a burst of bullets fired from its American-made anti-missile system.

STUDENT TAX CREDIT. President Clinton, in an election-year bidding war with Bob Dole over tax breaks, proposed a $1,500-a-student tax credit for the first two years of college. ► CITY COMMISSION

by R.J. Diepenbrock

On a night filled with fighting over zoning ordinances and city hall renovations, the city commission found the time to recognize three women of the community.

One of those women, Sherry Wright, director of communications for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, accepted the award.

Wright said with more than 50 businesses sponsoring Juneteenth, the day would be memorable. She said there is a real need to recognize heritage of all Americans.

"Far too few opportunities to celebrate African American heritage of this community," Wright said. In a series of 5-0 votes, the city commission passed five of six points on the general agenda, including the first reading of an ordinance that will amend the zoning regulations. The ordinance was presented by Karen Davis, assistant director for planning. The sixth was passed 4-0 with one abstention.

Plans are under way for another phase of renovation at Sunset Zoological Park, and public support is essential to the new improvements.

Zoo officials presented plans to the city commission May 21 to begin construction of new living quarters for chimpanzees at the zoo.

The commission granted permission to begin planning, but funding for the $500,000 project is still uncertain.

"The proposal put forth to the city commission showed that the zoo can pay for the project entirely," zoo director Scott Shoemaker said. "We would prefer not to have to pay for it by ourselves. We'd like it to be a public-private partnership."

The zoo not only plans to raise money for the project through admissions and concessions sales but also by selling monuments, which private citizens or businesses can buy with inscribed messages or memorials.

The zoo is selling 4-by-8 inch and 8-by-8 inch bricks for $50 and $250, respectively. The bricks will be used to provide stone paving to form a garden plaza facing the chimp exhibit.

There are approximately 200 8-by-8 inch and 2,500 4-by-8 inch bricks available for sale.

The fund-raising campaign has been going on for about a week, and several bricks have already been sold.

"We have already sold between 30-50 stones," Shoemaker said. "We've had good success with projects like this in the past, and if we have people who donate significant amounts of money, we usually honor them with a plaque."

Shoemaker said the current exhibit was not very humane.

"The space they have now is totally indoors," Shoemaker said. "The living quarters they are in is way too small for three, let alone four, chimps." A baby chimp is expected to be born sometime in the near future.

"The current structure doesn't allow the chimps to do the type of things needed for their behaviors,"

Catfish Derby could attract 75 contestants

Jacob Sorenson
staff reporter

The third annual Catfish Derby sponsored by Tuttle Creek Lake Association is set to begin Saturday.

"If the weather cooperates, I look forward to about 50 to 75 entries for this year's tournament," Bill Hughes, tournament chairman, said.

Registration begins at 6 p.m. Friday at Bottgers Marine.

Ham sandwiches, potato chips and iced tea will be provided for those in attendance.

"It's a good time for everyone to get together before the tournament," Ed Phelps, president of Tuttle Creek Lake Association, said.

Each two-person team will pay an entry fee of $50. Check-in starts at 6 a.m. on Saturday at the upper lot of Spillway Cove.

Each team must check its fish in by 3:30 p.m. Saturday.

The tournament will pay back 80 percent of the entry fee in cash prizes.

There is a team competition as well as a prize given for catching the biggest channel cat of the day.

"We like to give out cash rewards all the way down to at least 10th place and maybe 12th this year. This way we can have as many people finish in the money as possible," Hughes said.

Contestants may fish in all public waters from boat or shoreline, and all team members must keep their partners in sight at all times.

To be eligible for weigh-in, a fish must still be alive.

Contestants must be 16 years or older or accompanied by an adult.

Additional proceeds from the tournament will help sponsor a free youth fishing clinic.

Two hundred children from ages 8-12 will participate in the two-day event, which will teach them how to fish.

Each child entering the clinic will receive a free Zebco fishing rod and reel, and many door prizes are being provided by area merchants.

The clinic is scheduled Sept. 20-21.

"Every kid who comes through the door is a winner automatically," said Phelps, who is also chairman of the youth clinic.

Army has the best solution to solve minimum wage issue

During the summer, many of us attempt to get a job if we do not have one already. For most, it is a forgone conclusion that this job with not be a high-paying job.

As students, we are usually fortunate that these low wages can keep us above water financially.

After all, a diet of Ramen noodles and Kool-Aid is not all that expensive, and the parents might still be available to help us out if hard times really hit us.

What about those who have to live year-round on these wages, perhaps with kids?

myVIEW

Lach
FRANQUEMONT

What kind of future do these jobs offer people? The minimum wage now stands at $4.25 per hour and has for some time. According to the Progressive, that is 88 cents less per hour than it was in 1956, as far as real buying power goes.

A proposal is currently on the table in Washington to raise the minimum wage 90 cents an hour, spread out over the next two years. Before I discuss why this is a good idea, let's look at several of the reasons people claim to be against this idea.

First would be those who say the market should dictate what wages should be and the government should keep out of it.

Many of these people will point to the fact there are many jobs that start people off at $5 or more per hour because that is what the market allows. Of course, these people would have us trust business owners to always equitably share the profits with their workers.

In answer to these people, I would say trusting business owners to fairly determine what the market dictates is a hazardous proposition for the nation's working poor.

Certain professions claim they could hire more people if they did not have to pay the minimum wage while training. This is primarily in jobs where a certain level of real skill is needed, such as construction work.

This argument must be granted, but a simple solution awaits.

When I got out of the U.S. Army, the government offered to pay half of my salary to any company that would hire me and train me in a skilled position.

The Army's program could be expanded to the rest of the population as a chance to learn a skill and not force the companies to take on a liability.

Other people use the argument that businesses will be forced to relocate to cheaper labor markets if the minimum wage is raised.

This argument is lacking in reality if you look at the whole situation.

Very few industrial jobs, which face the possibility of being moved to a cheaper labor market, pay minimum wage.

The local McDonald's, on the other hand, faces little possibility of being moved to Mexico.

Finally you get the view, as expressed in a Wall Street Journal editorial, that raising the minimum wage will actually hurt the poor.

As they say, "We believe the minimum wage hurts poor people, killing jobs on the first rung of the career ladder for the most vulnerable members of society."

This argument ignores several facts. This has never been shown to happen with any minimum-wage increase in the past, and for many, this is not the first rung on the career ladder but dead-end jobs that they are going to be stuck with for the rest of their lives.

Now, here are just a few reasons a minimum-wage increase would be a good idea.

In a recent Reader's Digest, a demographic map of this country was presented, showing that in all but three states, welfare payments were higher than what a person could make working 40 hours a week at minimum wage.

Many would not doubt conclude that this means welfare payments are too high.

What it really means is that minimum-wage jobs present too little encouragement for people to get off welfare.

If we want people to get off welfare, we must provide real encouragement for them to do so.

We have the most disparate asset distribution this country has ever seen, and much of it held by the wealthy is not used directly to stimulate the economy.

With more money in the hands of more people, we could have a much more robust and healthy economy.

As students, many of us are in school hoping to not have to face the specter of minimum-wage jobs past this point in our lives.

I hope we can remember that we are the fortunate ones to even be here and give thought to those who are not.

Increasing the minimum wage would be a positive step forward for the whole country.

About Friday night... What happened?

Whether or not you approve, drinking is a part of most people's college experience. Even I have been known to partake of the fruit of the vine on occasion.

Most of the time I am a responsible drinker, if there is such a thing. I never operate a motor vehicle after ingesting any alcoholic beverage and usually only drink until I can feel the beginnings of a "buzz."

There are those who drink to excess. You have seen them at parties and bars, dancing like fools, flirting with the crowd and stumbling into furniture.

I do not like those people. They are amusing to watch for a while, but the novelty wears off quickly. They end up doing nothing but embarrassing themselves.

Friday night I embarrassed myself. I put away more alcohol in three hours than I have consumed in the last six months combined. I also disobeyed one of the unwritten laws of drinking: Thou shalt not mix more than three forms of liquor on an empty stomach.

I was drunk. I was severely inebriated to say the least. Toasted, fried, bombed, smashed, pickled, tanked, blitzed, shitfaced, potted, tipsy, plastered, stewed, roasted, three sheets to the wind, intoxicated, crooked, loopy, sloshed, wasted, juiced. I was all those and more.

I remember there was music, dancing, drinking and much merriment. I recall the exact moment I felt drunk and knew I should stop. It was right about 12:45 a.m. I also recollect ignoring my own advice and better judgment and continuing to drink.

My memory of exactly what happened after about 1 a.m. is a little fuzzy. I lie like a dog — it is a lot fuzzy. I recall a swimming pool, the song "Walk like an Egyptian" and the sound of thunder.

I awoke Saturday morning in wet clothes, hating life and wondering where my shoes were. I called a fellow party member for consolation and pity. After he filled in some of the gaps in my memory, I realized it was a wild night. I probably do not want to know much more than I remember.

When you are drunk, you say and do things you would not normally do sober. That is the point of drinking, I guess. The problem is I am a fairly outgoing person who speaks what is on my mind anyway. Introduce some booze, and watch out.

Under normal circumstances, after a few days of sinister smiles from acquaintances and a few "Rough night, huh?" queries, the whole evening would be forgotten. But no!

Most of my friends are journalists. Journalists are renowned for their inquisitive nature. A lesser-known and more profitable talent is their ability to blackmail. Needless to say, I will not be running for an elected office anytime soon.

Some of my friends happen to be photographers who take their tools of the trade everywhere. So my foolishness is also captured on film for posterity.

All kidding aside, I feel terrible about what happened. I am really ashamed about how I behaved. I hate to admit it, but I do care what people think of me. I do not want to be thought of as a drunken fool.

I have some perspective, though. I know I am not the first or the last to get smashed at a party and make a imbecile of myself. I know there are generations of college students who have come before me and done things under the influence that would make me blush. Some of those party folks are now in positions of great power and prestige.

I have learned my lesson. Next time I will listen to that voice of reason in my head. I do not plan on a repeat of Friday night's performance. I did have fun, though. I have the pictures to prove it.

Fellow primates need our help

If you have been to the Sunset Zoological Park recently, you might have noticed the chimpanzees' quarters are a bit cramped.

They also do not have much exposure to the great outdoors to romp around like they would in their natural habitats.

By zoo director Scott Shoemaker's own admission, the current exhibit is not very humane.

But we applaud the zoo's efforts to improve the habitat of our fellow primates. The new exhibit will be 5,500 square feet and will include some outside space.

Now the chimps need our help, too.

To fix up their living quarters, the zoo plans to raise money by selling monument bricks. Zoo patrons can buy the bricks, which come in two sizes, 4 inches by 4 inches and 4 inches by 8 inches. The bricks can be inscribed with names or short messages.

The Sunset Zoo is attempting to make the chimpanzee exhibit more humane. You can help.

The bricks will be used for the garden plaza that faces the chimp exhibit. They will cost $50 and $250.

Now, we understand that most of you do not have $50, much less $250, to spare this summer. You are more worried about paying the rent on your own habitat than some chimp's. But you and a few friends could go in on one brick.

If a brick still seems way out of your price range, the zoo is also using monies from concessions and admissions to fund the new exhibit.

So, just by spending a few bucks to visit the zoo, you could help out the chimpanzees. The money is well worth it, too. The Sunset Zoo has some incredible exhibits and animals that cannot be seen at any other zoo in the area.

While you are there, check out the chimp exhibit so you can see the display to which you are contributing.

Jordan should try NASCAR

The NBA Finals will be over soon. After Michael Jordan is finished embarrassing the entire Seattle SuperSonics team, the sports world will be looking for another hero.

Jordan's early retirement from baseball last year left the game without one of its prospective stars, and his comeback on the basketball court this year eliminated any excitement the game had created in his absence.

After winning his fourth NBA title, Jordan will have proven beyond any doubt he is the best player on the planet ever.

He then will have a chance to prove he is one of the best athletes in history, or at least in the modern era.

I am not suggesting Jordan return to the diamond or try to make the PGA tour, as some suggest.

What Jordan could do is take some of his money and get on the NASCAR sponsorship bandwagon. Joe Montana is doing it, so why not?

Not only that, Jordan's racing sponsorship would only take up a small investment of his time, freeing up time for him to participate in America's new favorite spring pastime — the National Hockey League. Imagine the effect this one man could have on the sporting world.

NASCAR would suddenly be marketable to a huge population previously neglected by the sport.

To increase the popularity even more, Jordan could get Dennis Rodman to drive the car for him, but Rodman would not be able to showcase his wacky hairdos under his helmet.

While NASCAR promoters are drooling over the marketing possibilities of Jordan's car, his airiness will be sharpening his skates and honing his no-look slapshot.

As hockey grows in popularity and people become more weary of the boredom that is Michael Jordan's NBA, he can prove once and for all that he is the best athlete since Jim Brown.

Jordan has shown his athletic diversity to some extent by playing competitively on a professional baseball team, but the true test of his athletic skills will come when he plays a contact sport.

With a few more pounds of solid muscle-mass and some skating lessons, Jordan would be a perfect wing for the Blackhawks.

Of course he would have to learn how to fight and talk trash, but he would have the perfect teacher in his new driver Dennis Rodman.

Not only would he prove his versatility by playing hockey, but Jordan would be breaking the color barrier in a sport dominated by rich white kids for too long.

A successful, professional-hockey playing Michael Jordan could revitalize youth hockey programs from large inner cities to small rural towns and increase involvement by minority children.

Jordan has star power far too valuable to be wasted on another basketball season.

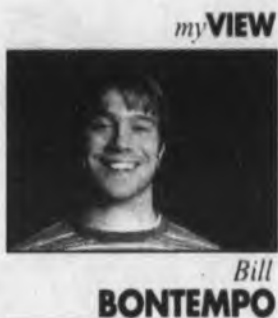

The NBA saw two straight years of rising stars and compelling, competitive playoff series in Jordan's absence.

Since his return, the playoffs became a forgone conclusion.

If he is truly an ambassador of the game, he should retire again and let the game find some new stars. Meanwhile, he can become an ambassador of two sports in dire need of someone to bring them out of obscurity.

We can talk about the possibilities of a football career later, but football has its own stars.

KC's No. 1 draft pick resembles Bo Jackson

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals took Dermal Brown, a power-hitting high school outfielder they expect to be "a franchise-type player," in the first round Tuesday of major-league baseball's June free-agent draft.

Brown, 6 feet and 210 pounds, was the 14th player chosen. A versatile athlete, he has signed a football letter-of-intent with Maryland.

"He's the best power bat the Royals have taken since Bo Jackson — for sheer power," Art Stewart, Royals' director of scouting, said. "We're very ecstatic."

A left-handed hitter, Brown batted .396 with 19 hits, 26 runs, three doubles, six home runs and 26 RBIs for Marlboro Central High School in Marlboro, N.Y. He also stole 17 bases. He was ranked 13th in Baseball America's top 100 prospects and offered numerous football scholarships.

The Royals are optimistic they can sign him to an immediate baseball future.

"We're not going to be battling college for him," Stewart said. "I think he wants to make a commitment to baseball."

Despite his power potential, the Royals do not expect Brown to strike out a lot.

"Everybody was amazed he's got such a short stroke," Stewart said. "He's not a power hitter who strikes out much. He will also hit for average. He's a 450- to 500-foot home run guy."

The Royals project Brown to be ready for the major leagues in three to four years, probably at one of the corner outfield spots. If he arrived this year, he would join an outfield already crowded with left-handed hitters.

"We've never drafted by position," general manager Herk Robinson said.

"It takes a player several years to get to the big leagues, and you have no way of knowing what your strengths or needs will be at that time. This guy was high on our list."

"Everything happens for a reason" might be a cliché sophomore high-jumper Wanita Dykstra does not quite understand.

Battling mononucleosis, Dykstra recorded one of her worst outdoor jumps of the season, clearing 5'10" to place 10th in the NCAA Championships May 29-June 1.

"It was very frustrating," Dykstra said.

"I knew I could do so much better before, and if I would have jumped only average when I was healthy, I would have made all-America."

Dykstra, who has felt symptoms since the Drake Relays, is now on the tail end of the virus.

However, missed training took a dramatic toll even on her latter performances of the season.

"You just can't make up for the amount of training she's missed," track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"She may feel good now, but she's not going to jump high just because of all the workouts she's lost."

Rovelto said he felt Dykstra still could have cleared the next height.

"If she would have cleared 5'11" on the first try, she would have placed third," Rovelto said.

Overall, Rovelto said he was pleased with the six athletes who participated in Eugene, Ore.

He said he was specifically impressed with the two freshman throwers Anna Whitham and Renetta Seiler.

"I think they had average days at the meet, but they performed well for their first time at a national meet," he said.

Seiler placed 19th in the discus with a throw of 149'11", and Whitham finished 15th in the javelin, hurling a throw of 145'2".

A school record and personal best was also set by triple-jumper Vanitta Kinard with a leap of 45'2" and a fourth-place finish.

Rovelto said the Olympic hopeful still did not compete up to her potential. "I felt she was capable of winning," he said.

Other placings in Oregon were men's high-jumper Itai Margalit placing third with a jump of 7'2-1/2".

Hurdler Travis Livingston failed to advance to finals.

After the return to Manhattan, many athletes are now preparing for the Olympic Trials in mid-June.

Dykstra, who will compete in Canada's trials held in Montreal, is hoping three weeks will be sufficient time to train and regain the physical strength she once had.

"Mono put a bummer on my NCAA Championships. Hopefully it won't do the same in the trials," Dykstra said.

Stadium receives facelift

■ Educational center, a giant-screen television and scoreboards are among changes at KSU Stadium

Dan Lewerenz
sports writer

K-State will kick off the Big 12 football season with an Aug. 31 match-up against Texas Tech at KSU Stadium, but don't go buy that big-screen television yet.

All you need is a game ticket for a look at the biggest screen in town.

Workers will begin this month on a major facelift for KSU Stadium, including a giant-screen television in the north end zone and a pair of scoreboards in the stadium's southeast and southwest corners.

The giant-screen television, a 23-by-27 Sony Jumbotron that will be mounted on the Vanier Football Complex in the north end zone, is the cornerstone of the package.

"It's great for the atmosphere of the stadium," K-State sports information director Ben Boyle said.

"Anyone who's been to a Royals game or a Chiefs game or up to a Nebraska game knows how it can add to the atmosphere around the game."

Boyle said having the Jumbotron allows for the production of an entire show around the game. Each play will be displayed live, along with instant replay and feature presentations on K-State athletes.

While K-State is not the first school in the Big 12 to have a Jumbotron screen — Nebraska put one in last season — the addition does put the Wildcats in select company.

"There are some other schools in the Big 12 that are getting them this year," Boyle said.

"I think Texas A&M and Texas are getting them. I think Oklahoma State is adding one next year, and Missouri has plans to put one in."

Adding to the package will be scoreboards above the southeast and southwest corners of the stadium.

In addition to displaying all of the vital statistics (score, time, time-outs remaining, down and yard), a message board will display scores of other games in progress and other statistics of interest, such as individual statistics or end-of-the-quarter totals.

Construction continues on the Athletic Academic Learning Center on the north side of Vanier. A 9,000-square foot facility, the Learning Center will house a computer room, both small and large study rooms and space for a library.

Pitching staff loses talent but gains some, too

■ Graduation, draft will affect Wildcats' roster for 1997 season

John Berggren
sports writer

Whoever thinks coaching college baseball is easy is dead wrong.

Even though the baseball season is over, K-State coach Mike Clark and his staff are hard on the trails of recruiting.

Pitchers will most likely top the Wildcats' wish list for late signees, especially with the loss of this year's senior staff ace Matt Koeman.

"Pitching is always important," Clark said.

"You can never have enough pitching. We've already signed Casey Cook, Clayton Soule and Charles Wheeler in the early period."

Other signees who signed on the early November deadline are left fielder Garret Bell, right fielder Nick Wood and infielder J.D. Loudenbarger.

The Cats have until Aug. 7 to fill the rest of their scholarships.

"We've always got to be looking," Clark said.

"We never know when something could go wrong, and we could lose somebody."

The Cats also risk the possibility of losing juniors Todd Fereday, infielder, and David Johnson, pitcher, to the major-league draft.

"Todd and David have been getting the most interest from the pros," Clark said.

"If they get drafted and the money is right, they may consider signing with a pro team."

When looking for possible replacements, Clark said, he did not look only to high school players for help.

"We prefer to sign people out of high school," Clark said.

"But some of our best players have come from the junior-college ranks."

Just look at Matt Koeman, for example.

"Jucs have the advantage that they are usually better suited to come in and give immediate help to your team. The drawback to them is that you usually only have them for two years," Clark said.

"If it were a perfect world, colleges would just take kids out of high school."

Fereday Clark said there is a long, drawn-out process his staff uses to find players to sign.

"We get over 6,000 names into our office of prospects that we could sign," Clark said.

"The first thing we do is look at where people are from. We don't sign anybody without seeing them first."

More or less, they have to be within a driving distance for us because we don't have enough money to fly people in who might not sign with us.

"We talk to the scouts to find out who is the best in respective positions, and then we try to go after them. We also do background checks and look at people's academic records before we sign players," Clark said.

"If everything matches up with what we need, we just hold onto our seats and hope we can get them."

Clark said the small budget K-State has is not necessarily a hindrance to his staff in the recruiting process.

"We feel like we have a better feel for what we can expect from our kids than maybe a few other schools do," Clark said.

"Most of our kids are from the Midwest, so there is a good chance they've heard of us before we call them."

Bond makes a better dragon

The movie "Dragonheart" might be better represented as "Braveheart 2: Enter the Reptile."

It is the traditional Euro-fairy tale with a "Jurassic Park" twist, but beyond the typical Hollywood cheese and melodrama, this is a really good movie.

The highlight of the movie is the sort of "bond of Little Jackie Paper and his devoted dragon, Puff" chemistry between the dragon and the brave but misled dragonslayer, Dennis Quaid.

The dragonslayer reunites with the idealism of the Round Table when he is befriended by the laid-back and lovable fire-breathing scaled creature in this fantasy about the good ol' days when "man's" best friend was a dragon.

Without the enchanting development of the relationship between the dragon and the dragonslayer, the story line is completely predictable and can be reduced to the David vs. Goliath motif of the seductive voice of rebellion that inspires the flock of desperate peasants to take arms against the tyranny of the big, bad, corrupted king.

"Dragonheart" is the trite but intriguing adventure of a return to Camelot complete with a goofy and uninvited sidekick, the wandering poet/monk who steals every scene he is in just with his facial expressions.

To the movie's credit, there was no pointless interference that would have resulted from manipulating a love affair between the hero and his supermodel partner-in-crime, the strawberry blonde with a bow and arrow and an attitude, although there are some obvious hints of romance between them.

Even Sean Connery as the voice of Draco, the last of the dragons, is an irresistibly adorable dragon, convincing enough to be forgotten as a pompous misogynist. Needless to say, he is much more likable as a giant reptile than as James Bond.

A noticeable and endearing quality in the movie is the subtle chemistry of all the characters director Rob Cohen is surprisingly successful at capturing, even between characters of the most minimal significance.

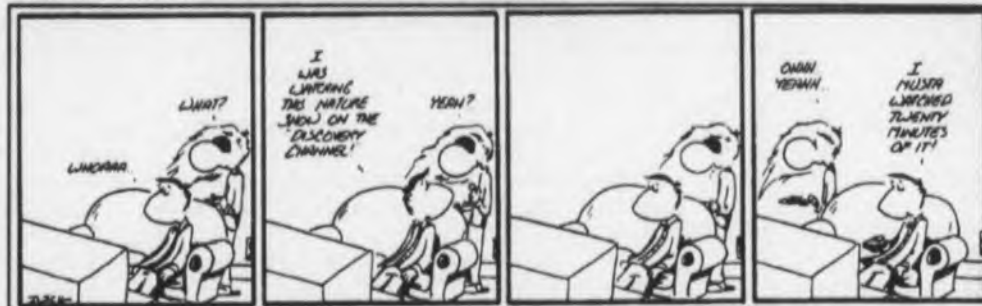

Also notable was the amazing technology behind the computer animation, which was responsible for creating the dragon as well as the dinosaurs that graced the otherwise ridiculous and dull "Jurassic Park."

At its worst, "Dragonheart" is innocent and heartwarming with an embracing nostalgia for a simple world where the forces of good and evil were easily defined and your greatest allies were sometimes sarcastic, fire-breathing, flying creatures with sexy Scottish accents.

New eateries add flavor

Emily Johnson
staff reporter

From huevos rancheros to spicy peanut Thai pasta, there are several new restaurants offering a variety of menu items in Manhattan.

Since mid-April, four new restaurants and one new coffee shop have opened in Manhattan.

One of these restaurants is International Pasta, which had its grand opening Monday.

"It's a fun, upbeat, contemporary atmosphere unlike any you will probably find," Rick Ross, vice president of International Pasta, said.

The restaurant, formerly Giorgio's Italian Restaurant on Blument Avenue, offers pastas with original flavors, Ross said.

Menu items go beyond pasta, with sandwiches, salads and children's items as well.

"The reason we are called International Pasta is because we carry about 20 different pastas from around the world," Ross said.

"Most of our items are from Sicily because that is where my family is from."

Ross said he got the idea for the restaurant from his father. He said he chose Manhattan because the demographics and location were good for starting the operation.

With high aspirations and competitive prices, these restaurants are challenged with starting a successful dining establishment in a conservative community, said Russ Loub, owner of Little Apple Brewing Co. in Westloop.

"Value of a meal is the biggest issue with Manhattan customers," Loub said. "You have to offer a fair price for a good product."

Loub reopened Little Apple Brewing Co. 13 months ago and said the restaurant has done fairly well. In order for a restaurant to be successful, Loub said owners have to be conscious of what other people are offering and at what price.

This concept is no mystery to Francisco Saurez, the owner of El Cazador, the newest Mexican restaurant on restaurant row in Village Plaza.

Heading into his second month of business, Saurez said customer response has been good and complaints have been minimal.

He said after six years of restaurant experience the key to a good operation is good service, a clean atmosphere and good food.

With more than 40 menu items with prices ranging from $3 to $13.95, El Cazador offers customers authentic Mexican food for lunch and dinner.

El Cazador is not the only new addition to restaurant row.

Bostonian Bar and Grill, located at the site of the former Chicago Bar & Grill, opened its doors to Manhattan in March.

Howard Schieferecke and Louie Rivera are the managing partners of Bostonian Bar and Grill.

The partners, originally from Greeley, Colo., came to Manhattan wanting to open a pizza-delivery service.

After visiting the Little Apple, they decided to open a restaurant that offered a semi-private atmosphere and a fun place to dine.

Bostonian offers American cuisine with meal prices ranging from $7.95 to $15.95. Menu items include seafood, steaks, salads and hamburgers.

"Our food has lots of flavor," Schieferecke said. "We are trying to offer something similar to other family restaurants but with competitive prices and bigger portions."

Across from restaurant row, in Westloop, is Manhattan's newest coffee house, Coffee Stains.

After the recent closing of Java Espresso and Bakery in Aggieville, Coffee Stains owner Deborah Bishop said she is not worried about making her coffee shop work.

Bishop and her husband did a lot of research before opening their shop. After sampling coffees from restaurants all over the United States, they found their 100-percent Arabica coffee was unbeatable.

Coffee Stains offers espresso, cappuccino, cafe breve, Torani sodas and house specialties. Food items include fresh-baked pies, biscotti, cookies, rolls and bagels. Bishop said she hopes to start offering soups and sandwiches in the fall.

LIVE MUSIC

Musician to play legendary artist's songs

Victor Stillwell
staff reporter

Country legend Hank Williams' legacy lives on in his daughter Jett Williams, who is coming to Manhattan to perform Friday night.

Country artist Jett Williams and the Drifting Cowboys Band will play at the Arts in the Park concert series 8 p.m. Friday at the Arts in the Park Stage in City Park.

Jett Williams and her band, the Drifting Cowboys Band, will perform music that is, for the most part, centered around her late father's legacy.

"It's a mixture that mostly leans on my dad's music. When you come to see the daughter of Hank Williams, people want to hear his music," Williams said.

Her father is widely known as a pioneer in country music. Some of his hit songs were "Hey, Good Looking," "Lovesick Blues," "Why Don't You Love Me" and many others.

Eric Melin, Streetside Records employee, said, "Hank Williams is probably the most influential country artist who ever lived. He's widely known as being the godfather of hillbilly and honky-tonk music."

Jon Farrell, owner of the Silverado Saloon, said, "Hank Williams is probably country music's biggest star of all time."

The Drifting Cowboys Band also has ties to Hank Williams' legacy.

Hank Williams' band was named the Drifting Cowboys Band, and two of the original members, Don Helms, steel guitarist, and Jerry Rivers, fiddler, are in his daughter's band.

Williams did not always know she was Hank Williams' daughter.

Williams was born five days after her father died at the age of 29. She was then adopted by his mother, Lillian Williams, who died two years later.

After her grandmother's death, Williams was made a ward of the state of Alabama and was eventually adopted.

It was not until her 21st birthday when she heard a rumor she might be Hank Williams' daughter.

On October 26, 1987, the Alabama Circuit Court ruled that Hank Williams was the true father of Jett Williams.

Even though she did not know that Hank Williams was her father, Williams said she had a special connection with his music.

"I grew up on Hank Williams before I knew he was my father," Williams said.

Williams said even as a youngster she had ambitions of becoming a musician.

"I was able, through the courts, to get my adoption records. One record says a social worker saw me in the middle of the dining room table singing one of my father's songs," Williams said.

She said being Hank Williams' daughter gave her the privilege of sharing his music with those who know his music, those who do not know his music and future generations.

Williams said she enjoys playing country music because it reflects life.

"Country music is the music of the people. You're singing about life, love and hurting. The music comes from the heart," Williams said.

Williams said she recently performed in Wichita and enjoyed it.

"I like playing in Kansas because the folks out there are grassroots people," she said.

After her performance in Manhattan, Williams will be going to Nashville to perform on the Grand Ole Opry on June 14 and 15.

"My dad performed on the Grand Ole Opry, so it will be an honor," she said.

Jett Williams, Hank Williams' daughter, will perform her father's songs at 8 Friday night at City Park's Arts in the Park Stage.

Bicyclists visit, raise funds for bike safety

Allison Woodall
staff reporter

Exhausted and sweaty after riding halfway across America, 46 bicyclists arrived in Manhattan Monday.

The bicyclists began their 45-day fund-raising tour in Los Angeles and were ready for a rest day. Manhattan was one of six rest days scheduled.

"I'm ready to sleep in," Jim Glaze, bicyclist, said.

"It's nice to kind of catch your breath and slow down."

"They need the day to do housekeeping-type items and also give their bodies a break," Dick Neuman, a member of staff support, said.

The cyclists did not just sleep. Before sleeping, several cyclists participated in Aggieville night life.

Many cyclists spent the next day in Aggieville and Manhattan Town Center getting haircuts and repairing bike equipment.

Harry Vincent, bicyclist, said Manhattan was an enjoyable experience with friendly people.

Neuman said he also enjoyed Manhattan and the time the tour spent here.

The cyclists are a part of Pedal for Power, the main fundraiser for the League of American Bicyclists.

The league works to make bicycling in America safer and more enjoyable for everyone, according to Curt DeWees, Pedal for Power director.

DeWees said through a combination of national advocacy, education and grassroots organizing, the league is winning battles for bicyclists across the country.

Pedal for Power cyclists find donors to pledge money for each mile they travel.

This money does not only benefit the league.

The cyclists can split the money fifty-fifty with a charity of their choice.

A 6:30 a.m. Country Kitchen breakfast was scheduled before the cyclists left Wednesday on the 65-mile trek to Topeka.

The greatest daily mileage scheduled was 117 miles during day four from Blythe, Calif., to Wickenburg, Ariz.

The cyclists have traveled through 22 of the 41 total cities en route to their final destination, Baltimore.

Deters said.

The K-State team is unaware of what kind of food they will compete against, but Deters said they felt Biscuit Bakes must be pretty good to have made it to the finals.

Biscuit Bakes, about three inches pre-baked, come four to a package, wrapped individually.

They go from the freezer to the oven with a bake time of 15-18 minutes.

Sarah Sporing, senior in food science and team member, said the preparation time is not bad for a product that fits in with the current trends but is fresh-baked and tastes more like homemade.

Development of Biscuit Bakes began in the fall semester, when some team members did a market survey. The survey was for a product development class in the spring. The preliminary proposal for the contest was due in February.

"We went to supermarkets to look for products already there. We noticed a lot of new breakfast food, but it was all microwaveable," Sporing said. "We feel that Biscuit Bakes involve more preparation and thought."

"It's not like you just go in the kitchen and come up with a recipe," Sporing said. "We had to develop a new product that could be mass-produced. It was very technical and on a large scale."

The group first worked with refrigerated biscuit dough but knew they had to evolve beyond that for the product to be entirely theirs. It also had to be designed for mass production.

"There's a big book with baseline formulas," Deters said. "Then we changed the formula as we needed to."

Jing Lin, graduate student in grain science and team member, started working on biscuit dough last October.

"One problem was finding the right amount of leavening," she said. "And we had to work with the freeze-thaw capability of the dough."

Another problem was the moisture in the filling, making the biscuits soggy so starch had to be added.

Score marks, or cut marks, on top of the biscuits allow steam to escape, thus eliminating some of the soggy mess, too.

Finding just the right cheese was another consideration. The final decision to use American cheese was based on more than just taste.

Some cheeses melt quickly and would leak out the scores, so a cheese with a high melting point was needed in order to stay inside the biscuit.

"We wanted to process the biscuit crust so it would be thin enough that a person would not just get a big bite of biscuit," Sporing said.

Biscuit Bakes are more than just biscuits with eggs and cheese. They also contain green peppers, onions, smoked ham and an Italian seasoning. Part of the appeal is color.

People definitely consider color in what they like, Deters said.

"We did not originally have the green peppers and onions, but our focus group said the first recipe was decent but needed something more," she said.

The team lost track a long time ago of how many evolutions the biscuits underwent.

"The whole key to product development is to make a product the consumer wants and then to do it," Deters said.

"We did not go by just what we thought," she said. "We had consumer tests."

One of the difficulties with the project was working with people from different departments and different schedules.

"Sometimes the work went on into the night. We worked until 10 or 11 at night and put in over 10 hours a week," Sporing said.

"And that was just formulating. That doesn't include writing the proposal."

"We found a lot of time late at night, especially towards the end."

The worst part of writing the proposal was the due date, May 15, which was during finals week.

The team was writing it as they were studying for finals and doing more consumer testing for the biscuits.

"Finally we absolutely had to stop testing and send in the proposal," Sporing said.

The process can be patented, and the team hopes a Kansas manufacturer picks it up for mass production.

"We are very proud K-State's team made it so far," she said.

taken to get here, Shaneyfelt remembered some embarrassing moments.

"I was competing in the Miss Junction City Pageant, and it was five minutes before I went on for my talent piece. Someone asked me about my performance, and I wanted to refer to my dress, which was supposed to be hanging right beside me. I looked back, and it wasn't there," Shaneyfelt said.

"Luckily, it was in the Junction City Theater, which has an excellent wardrobe, and I found a dress, although it was an absolutely horrendous brown. I took that situation, turned it around, and my song won the talent competition," she said.

Shoemaker said.

The new 5,500 square foot exhibit will include outside quarters and will provide for the chimpanzees' needs.

"In order to meet the chimpanzees' needs, they need to be able to get outside," Shoemaker said. "They need to be able to forage for food much like they would in the wild. It would help them relieve boredom, and the outdoor portion of the exhibit will have complex things for them to climb on much like they would encounter in the wild."

Aside from the $3,500 grand prize and the glory associated with winning, she is looking forward to other things.

"My goal is to make the top 10, be on television and have Andrew Lloyd Webber discover me and put me on Broadway. It's been done before," Shaneyfelt said.

Besides Shaneyfelt, there are five other K-State students competing in the pageant. They are Carrie Cox, senior in mass communications; Cheryl Hadley, freshman in pre-health professions; Marilyn Hetzel, graduate student in education; Deana Teske, junior in mass communications; and Caisha Williams, senior in theater.

The top 10 finals portion of the pageant will air on WIBW-TV Saturday evening.

Richard Sietz, a retired major general, will address the convention as a guest speaker.

Also, committee chairpersons from committees such as Agent Orange, Veteran Affairs and Government Affairs, will update the convention on recent events.

Curtis said the convention is needed in order to inform Vietnam veterans on several issues.

"It's important because we have a lot of information to share with the veterans that many of them might not know about," Curtis said.

Another goal of the convention is to increase membership in the Kansas State Council of Vietnam Veterans of America.

Curtis said he hopes the Council will be a way for the veterans to get involved in community activities.

"I'm excited that maybe we can get some more vets to come out of the woodwork, so to speak, maybe to try to change our image a little bit, to be a little more professional," Curtis said.

Whitewater investigation. The charges allege the two bankers reimbursed themselves for money they raised and contributed to Clinton campaigns, particularly the gubernatorial campaign in 1990.

Guthrie said he wanted Clinton to testify because he believed the testimony would be needed to clarify the circumstances of Branscum's appointment to the state highway commission.

After a batch of contributions to Clinton, Hill was reappointed to the state bank board, and Branscum was appointed to the highway commission. They deny that the appointments resulted from the contributions.

Clinton gave a 4-1/2 hour deposition at the White House on April 28 after being subpoenaed by his former partners in the Whitewater land-development venture, James and Susan McDougal. About 2-1/2 hours of the testimony was played for jurors on May 9.

On May 28, the McDougals and Arkansas Gov. Jim Guy Tucker were convicted on fraud and conspiracy charges. Several jurors later said Clinton's testimony played little role in the deliberations.

Business exec, KSU alumnus dies of cancer

Timothy French
staff reporter

Ross "Sonny" Brian Ballard, former K-State basketball player and longtime Manhattan business executive, died of liver cancer Sunday at his home.

He was 58.

Services for Ballard are pending.

A graduate of Manhattan High School and K-State, Ballard was a standout athlete in many sports and was a prominent Manhattan business executive for 21 years.

Ballard played for K-State basketball coach Tex Winter from 1957-60. In 1975, Ballard took over Ballard's Sporting Goods in Aggieville, a business his father started in 1951.

He is survived by his wife, Sheryl Ballard of Manhattan; a daughter, Kathy Hasler of Topeka; a son, Steve Ballard of Manhattan; and four grandchildren.

Memorials can be sent in care of Edwards-Yorgenson-Meloan Funeral Home, 1616 Poyntz Ave.

• More coverage, including a retrospective, will be available in Thursday's edition of the Kansas State Collegian.

► STAND FOR CHILDREN

More than 150 gather, protest on Capitol steps

Cynthia Fitzgerald
staff reporter

Children's advocates spoke about children's rights at the Kansas Stand for Children rally Sunday.

The Kansas Children's Service League, a statewide, private children's agency, organized the event at the south steps of the Statehouse.

There were about 150 people gathered outside the Statehouse in Topeka at any given time throughout the day.

League committee members emphasized strengthening the quality of family life through the provision of prevention, early intervention, treatment, advocacy and placement services.

Several Kansas organizations provided pamphlets and information on their services, which focused on the protection and well-being of children.

A few of the organizations gave balloons and candy to the children.

A program from 2 to 3 p.m. included guest speakers and musical entertainment.

Dressed in brightly colored costumes, the Beverly Bernardi Post Dancers opened the program. Dance classes from toddler-aged children to teen-agers performed a variety of routines.

A speaker at the event, Jim Caccamo, executive director of Partnership for Children, said, "People get so busy in day-to-day living that they don't stop and think about kids enough."

Is it good for the children? Caccamo said this question is asked by the Native American Indian Hopi tribe when it gathers to make decisions concerning its community.

"That would be a good question for everyone to ask on a daily basis," he said.

Speaker Joe Valerio, offensive lineman of the Kansas City Chiefs, said, "Sure, it's great to have professional athletes and celebrities as role models if they have a positive image, but these athletes aren't there for you everyday."

"Parents are, and they should be the true role models," he said.

Inside

Even though hundreds marched in Topeka for children's rights, the Collegian editorial board reminds people to continue the fight after they get home.

1996 Miss Kansas Tara Holland takes her victory walk down the runway Saturday night at the Miss Kansas Pageant at Pratt Community College.

Miss Kansas judges Candice Myers, a former Miss Kansas, and Bob Wheeler watch a contestant during the evening-gown competition.

Saturday crowning wraps up grueling pageant activities week

Tara Holland of Overland Park was announced as the 54th Miss Kansas at the spectacle of sight and sound Saturday night that was "Pratt America."

Regional winners from across the state put on their best all week trying to woo a set of five judges.

The contestants' week started Sunday, June 2, with rehearsals and intensified Wednesday with the first preliminary competition. A parade through downtown Pratt lightened the atmosphere Friday, but Saturday's finals were just around the corner.

Only one contestant advanced.

Other contestants received some parting gifts and a pat on the back for their way home.

Holland was set to gear up for Miss America on the spot.

"I've been looking forward to this too long to let lack of sleep get in the way," Holland said.

For the other participants, the night was the highlight of another pageant season.

"I learned a lot about who Lesley Moss is in this past week," Lesley Moss, K-State alumna and first runner-up, said.

"With the new competition, you get to improve yourself every time," Moss said.

Moss, with her bachelor's degree in broadcast journalism, is ready to get on with the rest of her life, outside of pageantry.

"I'm ready to dive back into school and pursue a master's in journalism. I work with an ad agency in Kansas City right now, so I'm on my way," Moss said.

She was among four current and former K-Staters advancing to the top 10 semifinals but was the only one to participate in the top five final interview portion.

After the nervous episodes, the excruciating talent competitions and the flood of swimsuits and evening gowns, some contestants were not ready to commit to another season of pageants.

"Am I ready to compete again? No, not today," Caisha Williams, K-State alumna and Miss Cheney Lake, said.

"It's going to take some time to reevaluate and see if I want to put another year into it," she said.

Williams also has other things to do now that she has graduated.

"I plan to go to Kansas City and start acting. I don't have a part yet, but I've been auditioning."

Leadership, legislation provide high school students political reality

Kevin Klassen
staff reporter

Life-altering legislation was passed at K-State — not by Student Governing Association, but by almost 700 high school juniors last week.

The American Legion-sponsored Boys' State convention, June 2-8, turned Marlatt and Goodnow halls into working models of city, county and state governments.

Mark Evans, curriculum coordinator, said Boys' State makes participants aware of the importance of government and its effect on daily life.

"We try to make them realize what really happens in government," Evans said. "People go home at night, and the roads are already there, and the postman has delivered the mail, and they have city water There's so many community things that people never think about — and then we take it on county and state levels."

The Boys' Staters spent the week role-playing as elected officials and passing legislation to better their communities.

"We try to give them an idea of the issues throughout the state and local communities and then have them discuss them," he said.

The 58th annual conference for veterinarians, June 2-5 at K-State, was host to more than 400 participants.

The conference focused on minimizing stress in handling animals, control of heartworm disease and maintaining nutrition in animals.

each year for the College of Veterinary Medicine, attracting 327 practitioners from 26 states.

The purpose of the event is to provide continuing education for veterinarians in helping them meet their yearly requirements.

NCAA TITLES. Two years after switching from NAIA, the Division II Kennesaw State Owls have already become just the second school in NCAA history to win baseball and softball titles in the same year. The only other NCAA school to win baseball and softball titles in the same year was Cal State-Northridge, which accomplished the feat in Division II in 1984. That school has since moved up to Division I.

BULLS WIN GAME 3. The NBA Finals are over, folks, except for the formality of Game 4. The Bulls have a 108-86 victory and a 3-0 lead in the series.

Game 4 is Wednesday night, and a victory by the Bulls would give them a sweep of the series and the best postseason record in playoff history: 15-1.

It was the ninth victory in a row for Chicago.

INTERNATIONAL

ISRAELI UPRISING. Nine people were killed in two separate shootings late Sunday in central Israel, Israeli radio said. Israeli security officials had expected attacks by Islamic militants during the election campaign leading to the May 29 elections, which were won by right-wing opposition leader Benjamin Netanyahu.

MASS GRAVE. Volunteers digging with their bare hands have unearthed more than 520 corpses from shallow graves, where they were dumped during factional fighting in the Liberian capital.

ETHIOPIAN FLOODS. Floods have forced 50,000 people to flee their homes in northern Ethiopia, Ethiopian media reported Sunday. The flooding in the Afar region began Friday when the Awash River overflowed its banks. Unusually heavy rains have been reported in the region for the last six weeks.

JAPAN PROTESTS. Nearly 4,000 people on Sunday protested a proposal to transfer U.S. warplanes to a Marine base in a Japan city from an Okinawan base slated for closure. The proposed transfer is part of an effort to consolidate bases on the southern island of Okinawa, where anti-U.S. military sentiment has intensified since three U.S. servicemen raped an Okinawan girl in September.

NATIONAL

FREEMAN STANDOFF. Two of the anti-government Freeman and a pair of negotiators sat down for another round of talks around a card table Saturday at the entrance to the ranch where the Freeman have been holed up for 2-1/2 months. The recent defections of four people from the Freeman compound will postpone, at least temporarily, further FBI pressure tactics, a senior official said.

AIDS TEST. A study in monkeys suggests that oral sex may pose as great a risk of AIDS virus infection as many other forms of sexual intercourse. But the research found no evidence of increased risk from casual contact, such as kissing or sharing utensils.

GOP STAND ON ABORTION. While vowing to maintain the Republican Party's anti-abortion principle, Bob Dole said Thursday he wants the GOP platform to include a "declaration of tolerance" welcoming those who favor abortion rights.

PILOT AT FAULT. It was a brutal assessment from a blunt leader. The Air Force's top officer said his men had failed, from commanders in Europe to the pilots at the controls of Commerce Secretary Ron Brown's doomed plane. The pilots had committed errors, the military plane wasn't properly equipped to handle a primitive radio beacon navigational system and, worst of all, he said, Air Force commanders had violated regulations in allowing the plane to try to land at Dubrovnik, Croatia.

ALASKA FIRES. Alaska wildfires, even those as intense as the Big Lake blaze, often are left to burn thousands of acres, partly because there are only trees to protect. Fire-fighters had the blaze, which has burned 35,000 acres, nearly encircled.

FBI FILES. The White House was wrong to obtain secret FBI files on 341 people, including prominent Republicans, and President Clinton agreed Sunday that those people deserve an apology. "A mistake was made it's inexcusable," White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said of disclosures that a White House aide perused the files in late 1993 for White House security records.

FISHERS LINE a rocky jetty Saturday afternoon at Rocky Ford, south of Tuttle Creek Dam, during the third annual Catfish Derby.

MANHATTAN RESIDENT Chuck Bever hefts the biggest channel catfish caught during the Catfish Derby. Jon Hawkinson, Manhattan, caught the 13.6-pound fish at the upper end of Tuttle Creek Reservoir. He and his partner, Gary Simmitt, Leonardville, also won the team competition.

a big fish story

■ Fishermen flock to Tuttle Creek Reservoir for annual angler event, take home cash and fish.

The fish were biting Saturday at the third annual Catfish Derby, sponsored by the Tuttle Creek Lake Association. "It was a success. The lake was a little high, but other than that we're very pleased with how the tournament went," Bill Hughes, tournament chairman, said.

Fifty teams of two competed for cash rewards. Jon Hawkinson, Manhattan, and Gary Simmitt, Leonardville, took home $800 for winning the team competition and an additional $200 for catching the biggest channel catfish of the day.

Hawkinson and Simmitt caught six fish totaling 57 pounds.

Hawkinson caught a 13.6-pound channel cat, which weighed in as the biggest fish of the day.

Hawkinson said he is not going to keep his prize money to himself.

"We decided a few years ago that if one of us caught the big fish, we would split the prize money," he said.

Anglers of all ages participated in this year's competition.

"We had entries who were 12 years old and up, including many fishermen who we'll just say are retirement age," Hughes said.

Anglers fished all over the Tuttle area, from the River Pond Area to the north and south ends of the lake. Hughes said the flooded bean and corn fields were the best places to try your luck in this year's tournament.

Hughes was also pleased with the good sportsmanship shown throughout the tournament.

"We didn't have any protests, and everyone showed good sportsmanship," Hughes said. "In fact, after Hawkinson and Simmitt caught what they thought would be a winning amount, they motioned over some of their competitors to fish in their spot."

This year's tournament included contestants from Nebraska and Missouri and as far south as Wichita.

Many local anglers also come out every year and support the tournament.

Local pub to open deli in Nebraska

Ashley Schmidt
staff reporter

The owners of 12th Street Pub are expanding into the sandwich business, awaiting the Sept. 1 opening of their Lincoln, Neb., deli.

Tyler Olson and Mike Robinson, co-owners of 12th Street Pub, and John Seltzer, bar manager, will share the ownership.

"We found a really good location. It is in the downtown area, butted up to the University of Nebraska," Olson, senior in marketing, said. "We wanted to be able to get the lunch crowd from the federal buildings and banks and an evening crowd of college students."

Unlike 12th Street Pub, which serves a menu ranging from hamburgers and fries to steaks, the Lincoln establishment will offer a lighter menu including deli sandwiches, soup, espresso and salads. The deli will not have a fryer or grill, so many items on the 12th Street Pub menu will not be available.

"We're going to be more concerned with getting people in for lunch, like state employees," Robinson said. "Other than that, it will be a lot like 12th Street."

Phil Nicoli, junior in business administration, was surprised 12th Street Pub's owners were expanding beyond Manhattan.

"It is run by college guys, so I didn't expect it to expand this fast, but I am glad to see it happen," he said.

Customers are not the only people surprised about the expansion.

"We didn't expect to open this one up as soon as we did, but it was just a great spot at a great location," Robinson said. A name for the deli has not been established, but the new business will not share 12th Street Pub's name.

"It's on 13th Street, and it's not a pub. It's more like a deli," Olson said. "We're not franchising (12th Street Pub). It's a whole new place."

Robinson will stay in Manhattan to continue managing 12th Street Pub, and Olson and Seltzer will move to Lincoln to open and manage the deli.

The deli will resemble a large Rock-A-Belly Deli, Olson said.

"It has 50-foot-high ceilings," Olson said. "Right now it is just a ground floor, but we're building middle and top mezzanines and an upper loft."

Construction on the mezzanines and loft are scheduled to start this week, and they will be completed by the opening date, Olson said.

Although the owners have not made plans for opening a third business, some options will be considered in the future, Olson said.

"We're hoping to go down to Texas, where I used to visit my dad, and check out the Big 12 schools," he said. "We'll go anywhere, but we'll look there first."

We didn't expect to open this one up as soon as we did, but it was just a great spot at a great location.

Institute offers high school students chance to explore leadership, scientific discovery

Charlie Sioux Charleton
staff writer

More than 80 high school students were on campus for the 32nd annual Engineering and Science Summer Institute at K-State.

The institute ran from the last week of May through the first week of June.

Tom Roberts, director of the institute and assistant dean of the College of Engineering, said the institute offers students an opportunity to learn about engineering, physics, chemistry, biology and math.

"We like to put them in a challenging, creative, problem-solving situation," he said. "What they learn here cannot be found in a book."

During the five-day institute, K-State faculty offer lectures and labs designed to illustrate the problems and challenges facing scientists over the next several decades. Roberts said the institute is a campus-wide team effort.

"We receive excellent support from the various science departments — including physics, biology, chemistry, math and geology," Roberts said.

"That is probably as important, because the camp would not be possible without the support of the others."

The program helps students determine interests in college and beyond.

"I knew I wanted to be an engineer, but I wasn't sure what all engineers did. I really enjoyed learning more about the campus and the area. I am thinking strongly about coming here," Jessica DePriest, Bucyrus, said.

Some of the students came because their parents had attended K-State. Rusty Macklin, Bartlesville, Okla., said both his parents graduated from K-State and his brother attends the University now.

Barbara Luse, Bucyrus, said the lectures helped her understand engineering. She said the dorms are pretty comfortable and she was really happy to see a lot of girls.

The highlight of the institute comes with tower testing. Teams of students, working from an instruction sheet, design and build a tower made of balsa wood.

After a presentation explaining the design of the tower, the towers are tested with a relay machine.

The relay machine applies pressure to the tower until it fails.

Each team receives points based on various criteria.

"The test today was the best part so far," Alex Darby, Topeka, said. "I came to find out which field of engineering I want to go into and if that is what I really want to do."

HIGH SCHOOL senior Rusty Macklin laughs, Bartlesville, Okla., as his tower shatters under the pressure of a machine designed to crush test materials. The tower Macklin's group built crushed under 12 pounds, while the previous tower held 56 pounds.

The Dregs of television

My grandchildren will learn about the '90s in a few simple words: It was the decade that talk shows evolved. Today, they are mutating beyond control. Something must be done.

[Enter generic talk show host.]

"Good afternoon, everyone, and welcome to a very special Jane Doe Show. Today we are confronting a very important issue with which our youths have to grapple daily: Does your boyfriend have another girlfriend?"

"Our guests today include Jen Ginger, who found out about her boyfriend's other girlfriend this morning. Jen, how have you tried to come to terms with your boyfriend's infidelity?"

"When I first heard about it, I felt a sickening feeling in my stomach, and then I became angry. I wanted to kill the (censored), you know what I'm sayin'?"

"Yes, Jen, we do."

"But deep down inside I think—"

"Jen, you're only on this show so I can look good. Don't push it. Next we have a very special guest for everyone. Terrance, could you come out?"

[Terrance saunters onto stage.]

"Terrance may look like a normal talk show guest, but in fact he is going to be the surprise for Ginger Farsmen, our next guest. She was not told about the actual topic of our show because we wanted to give her a little surprise.

"You see, today on the Jane Doe Show, you will see Ginger when she sees that her boyfriend has another girlfriend! Ginger, could you come on out?"

[Ginger walks onto stage, sees Terrance and looks a little surprised.]

"Ginger, I bet you didn't expect to see your boyfriend, Terrance, today, eh?"

"Well, I wasn't really sure what to expect. Your production people wouldn't tell me anything, and they wouldn't let me eat, either. What kind of show are you running?"

"Ginger, all joking aside, do you know why Terrance is here?"

"No, not really. You said this show was about people whose dogs look like famous people. What gives?"

"The real topic of this show is not about canine impersonators but about girls whose boyfriends have another girlfriend."

"So why am I here?" [Pause.] "Wait a second. You don't mean...?"

"Yes, Terrance has a second girlfriend!"

"Terrance, is this true?"

"No baby, I swear! I'd never touch another woman in my life, you know what I mean?"

"Liar!!!" [Ginger jumps from her seat and starts to pummel Terrance. Terrance's friends join in, and then Ginger's brothers join in. A large brawl ensues, and two people are seriously injured. The talk show gains $1.2 million in advertisement over the next two months.]

Funny thing is, you enjoyed reading that smut!

I mean, you're flipping channels, and you run across "strip-tease teachers" or "militia-skinheads," and you can't resist! It's fun. My roommate thought the Tempest Show was funny because "I laugh at other people's problems."

When you have Tempest interviewing people who are teenage mothers, and these people just do not have a clue in the world, it is hard to feel sympathetic.

Do these people even know they are on national television?

The Tempest show was called "Too young to have a kid." People tune in to this show not because they want to learn about teenage mothers and not because they want to be more informed about the state of adolescents in this country.

Rather, they tune in because talk shows are entertainment!

One girl on the Tempest show wanted to have a baby, but she did not have a job, and her boyfriend was jobless, too. So Tempest ragged on her for not having a job, not having her own place, not having any common sense.

There was another girl who was a teenage mother. She did have a job and a babysitter and a place for herself and even common sense, so Tempest (and the special-guest social worker) ragged on her for not spending enough time with her child.

You just cannot seem to win, huh?

But Tempest won. And the advertisers won. You know what I mean?

Analogy between interracial and homosexual marriages holds true

News from Washington — the House approved a bill last week to make interracial marriages unrecognized by federal law. Though states may pass laws sanctioning interracial marriages, the House bill permits states to ignore interracial marriages performed in another state.

No, don't worry. Congress has not gone that far — not quite.

myVIEW

Dan LEWERENZ

But the House did approve a bill preventing legal recognition of gay marriages. Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., has introduced a similar bill in the Senate.

Not everybody was pleased with the analogy I drew between interracial marriages and gay marriages last week. That did not much surprise me, but it did make me reconsider the issue.

I still think the analogy holds.

But perhaps the details — and the potential danger such action, whether directed toward homosexuals or ethnic minorities, poses — could have been better explained.

If the bill becomes law, it will be the greatest affront to civil liberties since Loving v. Virginia overturned that state's prohibition against interracial marriages in the 1960s.

Not only is the Defense of Marriage Act the first venture toward the altar, it is being done for basically the same reasons states prohibited interracial marriages — fear.

By the middle of the 20th century, remnants of Jim Crow laws were the only thing southern states had left to defend the existing social structure. The integration of the U.S. Army and schools made it increasingly evident the culture of separation couldn't last much longer.

While playing legal games to postpone school integration, Southerners fought tooth and nail to defend the last legislative bastions of their racism, including prohibitions on interracial marriages.

Forcing states to recognize interracial marriages would further a dangerous amalgamation of black and white cultures, leading to the eventual downfall of society, they feared. Even the Bible was invoked to defend segregation.

It was a culture war, and the segregationists saw themselves as God's warriors.

In that sense, the movement to prohibit gay marriages mirrors the laws against interracial marriages.

Homophobia, like racism, has no objective basis. Rather, it stems from deep within the Christian belief system (though it is important to note not all Christians find a prohibition of homosexuality in the Bible).

Advocates of the Defense of Marriage Act, like defenders of interracial marriage laws, fear the tacit approval marriage would give gay couples will hasten the decline of America into a godless nation.

There is a culture war brewing, they feel, and again they are God's warriors.

What they fail to recognize is that by giving the state power to determine which marriages are legitimate, "God's warriors" pose a greater threat to their own free practice of religion than any other this century.

Marriage is, at its heart, a covenant between two individuals sanctioned by God. As previously noted, not all Christians believe homosexuality is a sin. Therefore, some ministers and denominations have no prohibition against marrying a gay couple.

The state's insistence that these marriages are not valid is not an affront to the couple, though it does deny them a lot of the little benefits (tax breaks, unified customs forms, etc.) marriage provides.

It is a usurpation of the church's power to serve the will of God.

Is it God's will that gays be married? I cannot answer that, but I do know that if the government decides it can interpret religious truth in this case, it will not be long before it does it again.

The question of marriage is not a matter of gay rights, but one of personal freedom.

Freedom to live the life you choose unless and until you infringe on the rights of others. Freedom to worship in the manner you choose and of your church to practice its interpretation of God's will.

Freedom the state is about to take away.

► RE-ELECT PRESIDENT CLINTON

Editor,

It is obvious that we gays and lesbians have some right to be discontented with President Clinton. Yet I desperately hope that we will go to the polls in the fall in record numbers to vote for him.

Clinton's reelection is one of the most important things we can do if we are to stop the march of religious political extremists into total control and domination of our lives and civil rights.

Yes, appointments to the Supreme Court will be key — as will all court appointments all the way down to the district level.

Clinton has many positive achievements for the gay community including, first, the appointment of Ruth Bader Ginsberg to the Supreme Court and appointment of the first openly gay federal judges, of six women to the cabinet, of first openly gay cabinet assistant secretary and of more than 100 openly gay administration officials.

Second, Clinton supported the Employment Non-Discrimination Act and the repeal of the Dornan Amendment against HIV-positive members of the military.

Third, Clinton eliminated sexual orientation as means of denying security clearances and banned anti-gay discrimination in the executive branch.

Fourth, Clinton publicly denounced state anti-gay measures.

And fifth, Clinton created an interagency task force to examine hate violence and gathered a panel of experts to examine gay teenage suicide.

If Clinton is not ideal, consider the alternatives. We can't vote for Dole, and throwing our votes away on third-party candidates who cannot win is self-defeating.

Ralliers need to take action

In theory, the Stand for Children is a good idea.

But we've all witnessed good ideas turn bad because of lack of planning and little action.

During the last few weeks there has been a Stand in Washington, D.C., and several cities have been host to their own. Thousands of families have attended these events.

The purpose of Stand for Children is to raise the level of visibility that will then inspire people to become involved and take action in children's lives.

Good plan, right?

Of course it's a good plan. But like many other rallies, the event provided information, but did nothing as far as acting to make the lives of children better.

At the Topeka event Sunday, there was little incentive for families to stay. There was nothing to keep the children in attendance occupied and no food or beverage available.

Anyone who knows anything about children

While no one would dispute that the Stand for Children is a great idea to improve the lives of our children, we can't forget our individual responsibilities.

knows that you do not want to hang out too long with little ones whining because they are hungry and bored.

Pamphlets were provided, but no one wants to travel all the way to Topeka to pick up pamphlets.

And most importantly, as one speaker at the event noted, the parents who really needed to be there probably weren't.

We do not want to say it was a bad thing. It wasn't. We just hope all those who attended do not walk away and forget the purpose.

Just because you might be a good parent does not mean you should admonish those who are not. Help them. Tell those parents what they are doing wrong and teach them how to do it right. Parenting doesn't come naturally to everyone.

Don't walk away from the Stand feeling that you've done your part by attending. Take the information you learned and use it.

It takes the commitment of each individual to make children's lives better.

softball off while rec under construction

■ While the indoor construction on the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is complete, work continues toward the goal of providing a comprehensive recreational facility for students

Don Lewerenz
sports writer

The good news — current outdoor efforts will complement indoor facilities, improving existing facilities while adding others.

The bad news — summer intramural softball has been put on hold in the process.

"We're working on the infields," Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services, said, "so obviously we can't play softball."

While summer intramurals make up only a small part of K-State's intramural program, both team and individual sports, including volleyball, basketball, tennis, table tennis, and indoor and outdoor handball and racquetball, are offered.

Losing summer softball, Martini said, should not affect the success of the summer intramural program.

"This isn't anything on the scale of what we do during the school year," he said.

"We usually have about four or five teams in the summer, while during the spring there are hundreds of participants."

In fact, the work being completed this summer, including the addition of fences to divide internal fields and renovation of diamond infields, should improve conditions for intramural softball during the school year.

With four diamonds facing out from the center of the field, balls from games and warm-up often stray onto other diamonds.

Martini said erecting fences between the internal fields should help prevent this from happening.

On the diamonds themselves, the top layer of the infield of each diamond is being replaced with a material that should make play more consistent.

"We're going to have the top layer taken out and replaced with an ag-lime infield," Martini said.

"With the infields, we often have to wait a long time for fields to dry, and they have a lot of bumps and whatnot that can make the ball hop pretty bad. The ag-lime dries awfully fast, and it stays even."

A building to store outdoor equipment, complete with men's and women's restrooms, to be located at the hub of the inside fields is also in the works.

Sand volleyball is another addition to the Rec Complex's outdoor facilities, hopefully to be completed soon.

"They're putting in two sand volleyball courts out north of the Rec Complex right there by the parking lot," Martini said.

Asbury adds another player

Sports Information

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury announced Friday he has signed 6'5", 200-pound Marcus McCullough to a national letter of intent.

McCullough averaged nearly 20 points a game in leading Olney, Ill., Central College to a 24-9 record and a spot in the Illinois Junior College regional championship game.

McCullough will have two years of eligibility at K-State.

"Marcus had a very good junior-college career and is a nice addition to our program," Asbury said. "He's a multidimensional player who can play several places on the floor. That's what we liked about him, that he can add depth at a variety of positions."

McCullough is from Danbury, Conn., and attended Danbury High School. He competed in the state play-offs against former Massachusetts star Marcus Camby and ex-Missouri player Kendrick Moore.

2 Cats picked in MLB's '96 amateur draft

Shana Newell

sports editor

The MLB draft, which began last week, has nabbed two Wildcat hurlers.

Staff ace Matt Koeman, a senior right-hander, was drafted in the 30th round by the Cleveland Indians.

Koeman earned Big 8 Pitcher of the Week honors after throwing a three-hit shutout against Oklahoma State on March 20. He was named first-team all-Big 8 for the second consecutive year, winning seven games in 1996 and 13 in his two years as a Wildcat.

The 13 wins tie him for eighth on the all-time wins list at K-State.

Koeman also struck out 155 hitters in his K-State career, the fifth-best career strike-out total in school history.

This season, Koeman defeated the top three teams in the league — Missouri, Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

Also drafted was sophomore righty David Johnson. Johnson was a 29th-round pick by the Minnesota Twins.

Johnson tied the K-State single-season save record with his sixth save of the season, in game two of the Oral Roberts University doubleheader.

He is tied with Steve Scoville, who did it in 1990, and Marty Darnell, who did it in 1987. Coach Mike Clark said Sunday the two have not yet signed with their respective clubs. The contract amount offered Johnson was not very high, Clark said.

That amount will more than likely affect Johnson's decision to sign. If he signs with the Twins, he will be ineligible to play with the Cats next season. Johnson has two years of collegiate eligibility remaining.

Baseball tourney was a dream come true

It was every kid's dream.

In Omaha for the championship game of the College World Series, I watched Warren Morris, an unlikely hero, do the ordinary — hit a home run.

But this was not any home run. It was the game-winning homer for the Louisiana State Tigers. It was the one hit that would end Miami's bid for a victory at Rosenblatt Stadium once again. And it was a hit no one expected.

The junior second baseman was the only hitter in the Tigers' lineup who had yet this season to send a ball into orbit.

A m a z i n g, huh? On a team that set school and Southeastern Conference records for home runs hit this season (130), it was unlikely Saturday's hero would be nine-hole hitter Morris.

In fact, the Omaha World-Herald preceded the game with an in-depth view of unlikely hero Tim Lanier. Why? LSU's middle of the order was doing poorly in the tournament, so someone had to step up for the Tigers to even think about winning the coveted trophy.

And it seems Lanier had been that hero of late, jacking up his batting average with doubles and homers and RBIs galore. If anyone was expected to lead LSU to victory, it was the No. 8 hitter, Lanier.

At the plate Lanier stood, with one out, a runner on second and the Tigers down 8-7. One, two, three strikes, and he was out. LSU's expected unlikely hero was all but a hero, at least in the bottom of the ninth.

So it was, with two outs and a runner still clinging to second, that lefty Warren Morris stepped into the batter's box. And Louisiana State was still clinging to those championship dreams.

It was only the ninth game of the season Morris' name had been on the line-up card. A wrist injury had kept him benched for the majority of the season.

Morris must have been anxious for a hit because he swung at the first pitch — and drove the ball back down the third base line.

The moment it was hit, all 23,905 fans stopped breathing, it seemed. We knew it was out — it was that well hit. But was it fair?

What seemed like hours later, the ball sailed into the right-field bleachers and the right-field umpire signaled — fair ball, game over.

Not even a Tigers fan, I was elated beyond belief. I had witnessed something I thought only happened in fairy tales.

I took part in what will most likely be considered the most dramatic finish to a CWS championship game in the event's history. After 50 years, no other championship game has been decided by a home run.

Thanks, Warren Morris. You sure made my first-ever CWS appearance, but definitely not my last, something to remember for a long, long time.

Baseball is not all bad

In other baseball news, I thought I would take a few minutes to comment on some of the good things that are happening in the world of baseball. It seems most news lately has been centering on the bad in baseball — most notably Albert Belle and Marge Schott. But, I kid you not, baseball is not all bad. Here is why.

■ Women are finally getting their chance to play in the bigs. Last week, Pamela Davis was the first woman to pitch for a major-league farm club under the current structure of the minor-league system.

Davis pitched one inning of scoreless relief for the Jacksonville Suns, a Double-A affiliate of the Detroit Tigers. She earned the win against the Australia Olympic team.

Baseball fans could see Davis pitch in the big show sooner than they think. With the Tigers' pitching woes (they have the worst pitching in the majors with an ERA of more than 7.00), maybe Davis is the pitcher Detroit has been searching for.

Davis has long since been a pioneer for women in baseball. The 21-year-old was a starting pitcher for the Colorado Silver Bullets. Two thumbs up to Davis.

She was also the first girl to pitch in the Junior League World Series in 1988, and she played on her high school baseball team at Lake Mary High School near Orlando, Fla.

But Davis is not the first woman to ever pitch for a men's professional team. The most notable female pitcher is Jackie Mitchell. Mitchell pitched for the Chattanooga Lookouts in 1931 in an exhibition game against the New York Yankees. She struck out greats Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig.

■ Last week, the Yankees organization laid off 25 game-day employees in a move to save money. Among those laid off was Charlie Zebransky, a 73-year-old clubhouse guard.

I guess some of the players had gotten used to seeing Zebransky before a game. They chipped in and raised the $5,678 needed to keep Zebransky working.

If only players could chip in and help the owners out by cutting their paychecks a little bit. Imagine if some of the boys in Kansas City were to take cuts in their paychecks. The Royals would probably be in a little better shape.

Royals on winning streak

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Both teams and several players came within a whisker of erasing records in Kansas City's 12-8 victory over Seattle on Saturday night.

Kansas City's Bip Roberts drove in four runs, one short of his career high, and Seattle's Joey Cora tied his career best with four hits. The Royals stole six bases, one shy of the team record, and Seattle tied a club record with its 59th straight outing without a complete game.

In addition, the combined total of 32 hits was a high for any game involving Kansas City this year.

Roberts, who had five RBIs in a game in 1992, had two doubles and a single and lined out to deep right field with two on in the eighth.

"Tonight was a night that could have been one for the history books for me," he said. "I was able to get a few clutch hits. Everybody was able to get some clutch hits. What were there, four two-run doubles?"

David Howard, Sal Fasano, Jon Nunnally and Joe Vitiello each had two RBIs for the Royals, who won their third in a row.

The Mariners' road record dropped to 13-13, leaving Chicago and Cleveland as the American League's only clubs with winning marks away from home.

Struggling Kevin Appier picked up his second victory in seven starts. Appier (5-6), who has been locked in a public salary dispute with the Royals, went six shaky innings, giving up 12 of Seattle's 16 hits and six runs. Jeff Montgomery got two outs for his 16th save.

"I wasn't very good, but I probably wasn't as bad as it will look in the box score," said Appier. "I felt real good in the bullpen. But my breaking ball wasn't very good at all."

100-mile race to show endurance

Natalie Yakel
staff reporter

The Sixth International Championship for Equestrian Endurance is coming to north-east Kansas in September.

The event marks the first international athletic event in the high plains.

The race is conducted on a 100-mile course set for 6 a.m. Sept. 21 at Rocks Springs Ranch near Junction City.

There are many activities scheduled for the event, including a four-day festival featuring an art show, a trade show and the American festival of the horse.

"The sport really grew out of the mystique of the Pony Express rider around the turn of the century," said Jerry Gillespie, head of food animal health and management control and chairman of the equestrian endurance event committee.

About 33 area property owners have agreed to allow the 100-mile event to cut across their land.

The horses are being flown in from Europe and are scheduled to arrive Sept. 3.

ESPN sports channel might provide coverage of the endurance race, Gillespie said.

Attendance is estimated to be between 5,000 and 10,000.

Shuttle service will be provided for various viewing points throughout the race.

"Since 1985, endurance has been the fastest-growing international sport around the world. These are the finest athletes there are in the world," Gillespie said.

Jazz show moves to Friday nights

Ashley Schmidt
staff reporter

Jazz Night at Auntie Mae's Parlor has moved to a new night for the summer.

The event, which features the band Wasted Potential, was on Wednesday evenings, but it has moved to Friday nights for the summer to bring in a larger weekend crowd.

This is the first time the bar has moved Jazz Night since beginning it about two years ago.

Friday was the first night for the rescheduled Jazz Night. The turnout was better than expected, Jeff Denney, manager of Auntie Mae's Parlor, said.

"A lot of older people that work during the week couldn't come out on Wednesday nights," he said. "Now they can come out on Fridays and stay later."

Jazz Night will probably return to Wednesdays in the fall, Denney said.

"On Friday and Saturday nights during the school year, you usually don't need something to draw a crowd," he said. "It's busy enough."

Jazz Night does not attract as much business for the bar as it should, Brad Stowe, Wasted Potential fan, said.

"I think they are world-class jazz artists," he said. "It is a real treat to find them in a basement in Manhattan."

The band, which has been together for almost three years, includes students Michael Brown, sophomore in physics; and Brian Brooks, junior in music education.

Band members said performing on Friday nights is convenient.

"To be honest, since most of us have real jobs, we'll probably like Friday nights better," Bill McFarlin, band leader, said.

The five-member band has been playing on Jazz Night since the bar started it to help boost its mid-week crowd, Denney said.

"We were looking for a more sophisticated atmosphere," he said. "We've got regulars and all of that, but we're trying to get a different crowd and see what happens."

"It's our performance venue of choice," McFarlin said. "We really enjoy the intimate atmosphere. We refer to the concerts as 'jazz in your face.' You're so close to the band."

Wasted Potential tries to include different jazz styles in its performances.

"As our group has evolved, our repertoire has expanded," McFarlin said. "We play a wide variety of style in the jazz idiom, from be-bop and swing to blues and even a little bit of Dixieland."

Band plays for all ages

Jacob Sorenson
staff reporter

Big John and the 39th Street Blues Band rocked an estimated crowd of 1,000 people Saturday night at City Park.

Young and old filled the concert area for the Arts in the Park production, sponsored by Manhattan Parks and Recreation.

"I enjoy seeing all the children running around and playing together," Melissa Ridgway, senior in family studies and human services, said. "It's not everyday that you see all these different-aged people in the same place and having this much fun."

Ann Pavlik, recreation supervisor for Manhattan Parks and Recreation, was pleased with the turnout for the show.

"It was a fun show, and it was great to see so many people having a good time," Pavlik said.

"Big" John Amaro and his band played music for all types of listening audiences. The band performed some of its original blues, as well as covers from many artists, including the Allman Brothers and Marvin Gaye.

Amaro said he particularly likes playing concerts because they benefit the goals of the band.

"I like playing night clubs, but when it comes down to it I like playing concerts," he said.

"We're trying to play more original music, so it's better to play for a crowd that doesn't make as many requests."

Amaro, who is the band's keyboard player as well as a vocalist, said the band is working on a compact disc that is going to come out some time this fall.

"We have a label now, and we have already talked to several record stores in Kansas City, but right now we're going to try like hell to have it out by October or November."

The crowd favorite was saxophone and congo player Kenny Glover from Kansas City, Kan.

Glover played three different types of saxophones, including a soprano saxophone that he had had specially made when he lived in Canada. He said it took a while for the manufacturers to get it right.

"I got this soprano about five years ago," Glover said. "I love it now, but I had to send it back to the company about four times before they eventually got it right."

Glover ended the show by walking through the crowd playing a solo with his soprano saxophone.

During the solo, children from the audience followed Glover around as he played for minutes without seeming to take a breath.

Others appreciated Glover's ability to play different instruments.

"I thought it was cool the way he played three different horns," Manhattan resident Vince Domenico said.

The band members like playing in Manhattan and have played here several times at clubs like Auntie Mae's Parlor and Rowdy Trout's.

Playing the park makes it even more enjoyable for lead guitarist Johnny Isom from Olathe.

"This particular function is just great for us," Isom said. "The crowd was wonderful, and with perfect weather like this, we were just blessed all around."

MOVIE REVIEW

'The Rock' brings Alcatraz back to action

Claudette Riley
editor in chief

If hesitation before action is a prelude to quick death then "The Rock" is one long dissertation on how to stay alive.

This smart, visceral teaser to the promised slew of summer action flicks delivers a fever of tension and motion so relentless it will make your neck muscles sore.

Sharply executed action sequences and swelling, emotive music make a nearly nauseous backdrop for redeeming characters who exude both charisma and humanity.

Ed Harris, as Brig. Gen. Francis X. Hummel, is the conflicted villain.

Hailed as possibly the greatest battalion commander of the Vietnam war, he captures Alcatraz and holds 81 tourists and the town of San Francisco hostage.

Under the threat of launching 15 VX gas rockets, whose flesh-eating chemicals would create an ecological disaster, the thrice-decorated Purple Heart-recipient demands $100 million for the families of 83 marines denied compensation after losing their lives under his command.

Although it is difficult to buy Harris as the justice-fueled Jeffersonian figure he projects himself as being, one wants to cheer him on.

The hypocrisy of a military hero who eats "God and country" for breakfast every morning turning expatriate and murderer is never adequately addressed.

And even Harris' tightly-patterned mannerisms and lean, soldier frame never mask the cool blue eyes betraying his heart of honor.

Sean Connery walks quietly into the first scene with the lulling whisper of his legend as an accompanying chorus.

Sprung into freedom with the quickness of a tortured cat, this former British operative, who managed to escape two maximum security prisons, is recruited to break into Alcatraz.

Curiously sharp and beautifully articulate following three decades of near isolation in prison, Connery shows no signs of dulling.

He even jokes about losing his sex appeal, which makes him more endearing to the swooning female audience members who run the risk of being totally forgotten in this testosterone-driven flick.

A wrongfully accused operative holding the key to secrets over America's last half-century, he is believable as the silhouetted savior emerging on the gangplank of Alcatraz to free those held against their will.

His good-natured sidekick, Stanley Goodspeed (Nicholas Cage) is in manic mode as the almost giddy FBI chemical warfare specialist.

The genuine appeal of their bantering makes for delightful inter-

Anderson, played by Michael Biehn, who has etched out a career playing second fiddle in action flicks such as "Terminator" and "Alien," makes a patriotic turn as leader of the elite Navy Seal Team.

When the Seal Team that has accompanied by Connery and Cage is lost in a stand-off fraught with moral conflict, the audacious duo is left to complete the mission.

There is no guesswork involved in the outcome of "The Rock," though watching the ambiguous characters face their internal conflicts provides ample entertainment.

Watch for the best heart-stabbing scene since "Pulp Fiction" had audiences slammed forward, clutching their chests.

The real star of this thriller is the golden-dropped sweeping postcard shots of San Francisco and the decaying labyrinth of Alcatraz.

The hypocrisy of a military hero who eats "God and country" for breakfast every morning turning expatriate and murderer is never adequately addressed.

Students finalize plans

Renee Fisher
staff reporter

Thousands of high school students will be on campus this month to finalize their plans to attend K-State this fall.

Orientation began last week and continues through the end of June.

"About 250 students visit campus each day of orientation," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

"That doesn't take into account that each student has one or two parents as well."

The K-State Student Union is the building of highest traffic during orientation.

Kelly Kiefer, junior in public relations, said students start going through the building at 7:45 each morning.

Students begin to interact with orientation leaders when they divide into groups based on their majors.

From there, they go to a "Tips for Success" session, where leaders answer questions and give advice about enrollment.

"We talk about drop/add procedures and how to get into the right classes," Chris Hansen, senior in nuclear engineering, said.

The next part of the program is the K-State Show.

Leaders perform four different skits about diversity, organized living, involvement and time management, and advising and enrollment.

"We look at skits that have been done in the past, but we basically start from scratch," Jason Butell, senior in pre-medicine, said.

"We try to emphasize the important parts, but we also try to make them humorous."

The skits, as well as an address by Pat Bosco, dean of student life, take place in Union Station.

From there, students go to their individual colleges for advising and enrollment.

When they are finished, they go back to the Union for lunch.

During lunch, the K-State Expo takes place outside the Stateroom cafeteria.

"We have about 25 tables set up with services for our students," Franklin said. "We have more participants than last year in our expo."

Services and advice about financial aid, housing, greek affairs, banks and involvement are a few on the first floor of the Union.

Karen Bauman, a parent from Sabetha, said she was happy with the information at orientation.

"I'm very impressed with orientation. This is our second daughter that has enrolled at K-State," Bauman said.

"There's a lot of new stuff, so it's been really interesting."

Each day concludes with K-State ID distribution. By this time, students will have their class schedules for the coming semester and will be given a last chance to ask questions.

"It's kind of overwhelming for the new students," said Keri Stoner, orientation leader and junior in nutrition and exercise science. "But that's why we're here."

About 250 students visit campus each day of orientation. That doesn't take into account that each student has one or two parents as well.

▶ VIETNAM VETERANS

Remembering, educating key to conference

Renee Fisher
staff reporter

Messages about remembering the Vietnam veteran and educating future generations were sent at the first Kansas Vietnam Veterans Conference.

The conference was held in Junction City to commemorate service given to the country.

"This is a tribute to those that made the ultimate sacrifice so that we can stand here today," Ken Edmiston, state chaplain, said.

Soldiers who gave their life were not the only ones remembered.

"If you love liberty and appreciate your freedoms today, you need to thank a soldier," Edmiston said.

The motto from the Vietnam Veterans of America, "Together then, together now," served as the center for the day.

"Vietnam veterans are a dying breed," Edmiston said. "There won't be many left after a few more years."

Working toward the education of future generations is part of the purpose of this organization.

"We're working for a perpetual understanding of why the Vietnam war took place and what needs to be done to prevent a war like Vietnam from ever happening again," Edmiston said. "We need to teach our children the historical course that led us into that war."

"There is a lack of continuous education and information," Retired Lt. Gen. Richard Seitz, Junction City, said.

Another part of the conference's purpose is helping veterans cope with emotional and medical troubles.

"The Vietnam war was so divided," Seitz said. "For so long, the veteran has received a bad reputation and this image caused some of the veterans not to talk about it. I think a lot of veterans wanted to forget they served."

Retired 1st Lt. Merrill Werts emphasized the importance of remembrance.

"The fact is a lot of our sons and cousins and relatives and friends were there. We can't forget that. If we have regard for them, we've got to remember," he said.

fessor of veterinary parasitology, said the conference benefits K-State by producing veterinary students, providing education, localizing the referral center and producing quality research.

"About 30 KSU faculty present lectures on research ideas being developed, which shows practitioners what we're doing as far as cutting-edge technology," Dryden said.

Linda Johnson, director of audio-visual resources, said the colleagues are like a close-knit family. They consider K-State and its home and exchange ideas with faculty on the technologies.

Because the average veterinary student graduates with a debt of $45,000, the conference hosts a scholarship auction aimed to benefit students.

This year's highest-priced item, a football signed by coach Bill Snyder and the Holiday Bowl team, earned $610.

He said Boys' State helps participants decide for themselves where they stand on political issues.

"A lot of kids have a preconceived political opinion that's not of their own volition, formed by the media, their teachers or their parents," Evans said. "We try to present them with issues that reflect the issues of our state."

James Eash, participant from Wichita, said Boys' State helped him curb his frustration about the way government operates.

"Before this, I was always kinda upset about how the Senate and the rest wouldn't get along in real government, and now I see all the little details that go into it and all the problems they really have to work around," Eash said.

Nate Stange, participant from Wichita, said lobbying was his favorite part of Boys' State.

Election offers new faces

■ With numerous departures voters will replace old powerhouses

R.J. Diepenbrock
staff writer

Kansas faces an election year unparalleled in recent history, with three veteran political figures stepping down from their roles in Congress.

Tuesday, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., officially resigned his position as senate majority leader, only to have Lt. Gov. Sheila Frahm sworn in an hour later.

Since Dole's seat will not expire for another two years, a special election will be held Aug. 6 so Kansans can decide whom they want as senator.

Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., former Gov. Joan Finney and Jill Docking, an investment broker from Wichita, are running for Dole's seat.

"Kansas is about to have a civilized, thoughtful and yet a very spirited campaign based on the issues that define us and the issues which distinguish us," Brownback said in a speech given when he filed for the resigning senator's seat.

The filing deadline for Dole's seat is June 24.

Finney and Docking, a vice president in the investment brokerage firm of A.G. Edwards and Sons Inc. in Wichita, are running on the Democratic ticket.

"Too much money is wasted in Washington on government giveaways and those who don't need it," Docking said in her announcement speech, "and too little is provided to needy children, improving our schools and providing tax relief for the middle class."

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., announced her retirement in November 1995.

Rep. Pat Roberts and Sen. Jerry Moran, majority leader in the state Senate, are two of four Republicans who have filed for her seat. Sally Thompson, state treasurer, is the lone Democrat running for the seat.

Thompson's campaign manager, Tama Wagner, said there is an admiration for Kassebaum.

"Sally Thompson wants to carry on Senator Kassebaum's tradition of confidence and leadership," Wagner said.

Wagner said there is a great need for a balanced budget and for education.

"Sally Thompson will bring security to Kansas families," Wagner said.

Wagner said there needs to be a partnership between the state and the federal government.

Kansas is also losing third-district Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., to retirement.

Among the eight candidates is Vince Snowbarger, majority leader in the Kansas House.

► INTERNET ACCESS

SLIP connection to allow greater off-campus access

Tara Wray
staff writer

The next time you try to dial in to the K-State campus computing network from off campus, you may not have to wait as long to get through.

"With the new equipment, you shouldn't get a busy signal," Dylan Zehr, database administrator for Telecom, said.

On June 1, expanded access to campus by off-campus users was made available through a Serial Line Internet Protocol, known as SLIP.

"SLIP allows people at home access to the computer networking system," he said.

Prior to updating SLIP, there were 64 modems available to all off-campus users, limiting access to the campus computing network.

With the improved system now in place, there will be an additional 96 high-speed modems added to the previous 64, reducing busy signals.

The new modems will run at 28.8 kbps (kilobits per second), the fastest speed available at K-State.

According to the K-State Telecommunications web page, busy signals will be down to five in every 100 calls.

But with the new progress comes a price. A $5-per-month fee for 15 hours of access will go into effect July 1.

A charge of 50 cents for each hour thereafter will be added to your bill.

For up to 80 hours of connection time, there is a $10 charge. For unlimited ed access, there is a $110-per-month fee.

To acquire feedback on the improved system and to work out any glitches prior to whole-campus availability, those wishing to acquire SLIP as beta test users may do so for free until July 1.

So the next time you try to log onto the Internet to find out more about whatever you are looking for, you will not have to spend a half hour listening to that annoying busy signal.

Ballard, a Manhattan business execu-

BIKEWORKS EMPLOYEE Chris Casey, Manhattan resident, frequently rides his mountain bike at the bowls at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. The bowls, near the spillway area, are popular because it is illegal to ride in the spillway area that was damaged by the 1993 flood.

Club seeks cycling enthusiasts

Cycling Club is searching for a way for Manhattan cyclists to put their bikes to use.

David Murray, Cycling Club member, said biking in Manhattan is not active for several reasons.

Murray said one of the best areas in Manhattan for mountain biking is closed to bike riders.

"There's an awesome area with good trails right by the high school and zoo," Murray said.

"I guess the city doesn't want to take liability for accidents."

Richard Allen, park planner for Manhattan Parks and Recreation, said the area behind the zoo is prohibited to cyclists due to environmental concerns. The area, called the Spur, is a steep path with trails cutting back and forth.

He said bikers take the shortcut and drive down the hill, creating new drainage ways, destroying vegetation and leading to erosion.

The Parks and Recreation Department is exploring areas where cyclists can ride.

"We realize that cycling is not an overnight trend," he said.

"Everyone is biking. I have a mountain bike myself. We just have to come up with a facility that is more appropriate and doesn't harm the area."

Tuttle Creek State Park and Linear Park are areas for cyclists.

Murray also said many drivers in Manhattan are not courteous to bike riders.

Sgt. Stan Conkwright of the Riley County Police Department said cyclists must remember they are required to follow the same laws as motor vehicles.

"Cyclists and cars just have to work together and follow the same rules," he said. "The most important thing is remembering pedestrians always have the right-of-way."

Murray said the club is used as a base for organizing, solving the problem of students' coming and going as they attend K-State.

Last semester the Union Program Council had a problem organizing an event.

"We tried to sponsor a bike trip out to Milford Lake," Scott Wrenick, Cycling Club and UPC member, said. "It fell through because there wasn't enough interest."

Bill Marshall, Cycling Club founder, said the club plans to organize a mountain bike race in the fall and hopes casual bikers will give racing a try.

"A lot of people around here bike just for fun, which is fine," Marshall said. "I'm just wanting to get them to give racing a try."

Marshall said the club is looking at Tuttle or Carnahan creeks as sites.

The race will serve as a fundraiser for the club, which also hopes to receive money from Student Senate.

"Right now we've been given money from Sports Club. It's a program ran through the University that gives money to clubs such as soccer, rugby and rowing," he said.

We realize that cycling is not an overnight trend. We just have to come up with a facility that is more appropriate.

Cyclist discovers nationwide napping spots

Lying still on the roadside is a man.

Do not panic. Ralph Galen may have decided it was nap time.

Galen, a retired dentist from Cambridge, Mass., is participating in the League of American Bicyclists Pedal for Power tour.

It stopped in Manhattan last week for a scheduled rest day.

The league works to make bicycling in America safer and more enjoyable for everyone.

"One of my greatest pleasures is napping," Galen said. "If you've got to nap, you've got to nap."

His colleagues on the tour have begun a scrapbook picturing his naps across the United States. The scrapbook begins with a photo of him napping on a highway.

"I didn't think about being afraid," Galen said. "I had to sleep. It's how I recharge myself."

He said the sag wagons that were responsible for making sure the last person is in, get annoyed by his napping.

"I'm very accustomed to biking alone. So if I need to nap, I try to find a place to hide so they won't find me, maybe behind a tree or something," Galen said.

Businesses and communities have been kind to Galen's nap needs.

"Two days ago I was in a restaurant by myself having a nice barbecue sandwich," he said. "I got tired and noticed a nice corner wall. I asked the waitress if she would mind if I took a brief nap. I got some of my best sleep there."

On one stretch of the tour, he was cycling past a store in Larned when he decided he was tired.

Galen said he sat down to rest for a moment and fell fast asleep.

"Next thing I knew the owner woke me up because a lady wanted to buy the chair," he said. "He was really nice, though. He told me I could sleep in the chair if I liked."

Galen is completing the trip across America for three reasons.

The first is to raise money for the league and Galen's personal charity, a halfway house in Israel.

Galen discovered the halfway house while on a global bike tour in 1965.

"Every time I feel that I can't go on, I remember the 154 sponsors I have and the people I'm raising money for," Galen said.

Another reason is to road-test his bicycle safety invention, I See You.

I See You is a flag that extends about two feet horizontally from the waist. The flag lets motorists know the space amount to allow bicyclists.

Galen's third reason to complete the trip is to write the final chapter in his book, "Two Years Until Saturday: There is life after a career in dentistry."

Curfew helps parents

Heather Classen
staff reporter

Clinton's message of curfews for all American cities may come at the right time for some, but Manhattan is ahead of the game.

Manhattan's curfew law, dealing with those younger than 18, has been around for more than 20 years.

"Curfews are like shots. It hurts right now, but it's good for you down the road," Sgt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said.

Moldrup is one of the officers with the responsibility of upholding the midnight to 5 a.m. curfew.

Curfews give parents a good tool to use in common-sense parenting, Moldrup said. It is something parents can lean on.

Parents like Beryl Adams, Manhattan resident, are grateful for the tool.

Adams was in strong favor of using the city curfew in order to set her son's curfew while he attended high school.

Adams said she used the curfew and knows of other parents who did.

President Clinton recently urged all American cities to adopt curfews similar to Manhattan's, banning young people from the streets at night in an effort to decrease juvenile crime.

Clinton also said these were the kind of old-fashioned rules most of us had growing up.

Moldrup said the curfew law gives the police a good preventive tool, as well.

"If the police see the same youth eight times for a curfew violation, a problem becomes clear," he said.

Moldrup said it sets a track record and helps parents see the big picture.

Sometimes this can be used to prevent future problems.

While the curfew might be on the minds of some Manhattan residents, it is not foremost on everyone's.

Bryan Lewis, a Manhattan teenager, said he knew what time the curfew was, but it did not matter, because he does not have a curfew.

Young people are not the only ones to be pulled in for breaking curfews.

Parents can also be in violation of the law for knowingly allowing their children to violate the city curfew.

Clinton said he thinks most teenagers will think curfews are too strict, but teens must know it is a dangerous world.

New bill tightens limit on underage drinking

Renee Fisher
staff reporter

A bill concerning the legal limit of intoxication for underage drinkers will become law in Kansas on July 1.

The federal government passed a bill lowering the level of alcohol that can be found in an underage person to .02.

This means anyone younger than age 21 who has a blood alcohol level of .02 or higher will be charged with DUI.

When the federal government passed the zero-tolerance bill, it said states would have to comply or face the loss of their highway funds.

Kansas was working on similar legislation when the federal government passed its bill.

The state legislature passed its bill, and Gov. Bill Graves signed it into law.

Local representatives shared support of this action.

"I voted yes because it made sense,"

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said. "The reality is that it is not legal for them to consume."

"My vote was a safety vote," Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said. "Driving is a privilege, and the use of alcohol abuses that privilege."

The .02 window was created because substances not considered alcohol, like cough syrup and mouthwash, can be detected by the breath test.

"The Kansas Bureau of Investigation's technical people indicated that a mistake would be avoided with the .02 margin," Hochhauser said.

"My understanding is that .02 will cover all the legal possibilities," Glasscock said.

In 1993, Kansas law lowered its level of legal intoxication from .10 to .08.

The level of .08 will remain for those of legal drinking age.

"This law tends to send a message about what is important. Young people need to understand that the law is the law," Glasscock said.

"If you've had a couple of beers, and you're underage, you are still breaking the law."

Trail ride to raise funds for research

Tamara K. Peterson

More than 500 horse enthusiasts from nationwide will be "On the Trail to a Cure" this weekend.

The eighth annual trail ride is presented by the Brushbusters Riding Club. Activities can be observed by the public at no fee.

The trail ride will be 2-1/2 miles south of Interstate 70 on Kansas Highway 177.

"Everybody has lost either family members or close friends from some form of cancer," Marj Barngrover, senior in animal science, said. "The most satisfying part of the trail ride for me is being closer to finding a cure for cancer."

Riders collect pledges to raise money for cancer research. Each year becomes more successful, as riders create an awareness for the ride.

Veterinarians from the College of Veterinary Medicine will present basic horse care and tips on how to handle horses on the trail.

Sheryl Tasker, ride chairwoman, said she appreciates the K-State veterinarians on horseback in case a horse gets sick during the ride.

"Two years ago, it was 110 degrees. When it's that hot, riders must know what not to do," Barngrover said. "Allowing the horse to drink from a cold stream could make the horse sick."

Members gather donations for the raffle from Topeka and Manhattan. Raffle tickets are $1 and go toward a chance to win a registered bay yearling quarterhorse gelding from Lazy T Ranch in Richmond.

PRAYER TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN. (Never known to fail.) Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK KAROLYI@KSU.KSU.EDU

I see London I see France ...

The great underwear debate rages on: boxers vs. briefs

I am so tired of men whining about not understanding women. Everytime I turn around there are grown men crying about not being able to figure us out.

Well, I have got a news flash for all the males — you are impossible to understand. The big area of misunderstanding for me, from which I sincerely think all other conflicts arise, is men's underwear.

Men seem to cling to their choice of underwear and defend it to the end. There is of course the briefs, boxers or absence of undergarments discussion. There is also the confusion about the new so-called boxer-brief combination.

It boggles the mind, doesn't it? I have witnessed heated debates between men about this earth-shaking topic.

I am not saying women are not a tad bit concerned with their choice of undergarments. We even have a special name for them — lingerie.

Women choose underwear based on how likely we think it is that another person will see them and who that person is.

We have underwear reserved for that special time we know no one else will see them. (Women, nod if you know what I am talking about.) We have underwear we take home and let Mom wash, and then we have the $14-a-pair underwear that usually crawls up.

This is a good thing. Otherwise, every woman I know would wear those nasty Lovepats underwear from Wal-Mart all the time, and Victoria's Secret would go out of business.

Men, however, choose their underwear for comfort, convenience and social standing, among other things.

This strange attachment to their intimate apparel began when they were children. Ask your boyfriend or husband, or grab some man on the street, and ask him about his childhood heroes. It does not matter if he was a Superman freak or a G.I. Joe wannabe, I give good odds that he owned a lunch box and at least one pair of skivvies with his favorite superhero on it.

(I am not responsible for the legal ramifications of grabbing men on the street and asking them about their childhood underwear experiences.) Maybe my problem is I do not understand the function of some men's underwear, especially that combination penis maze/pocket on the front of briefs — you know, that strange flap-thing on the front of white underwear.

My 7-year-old son introduced me to the many uses of this curious phenomenon not too long ago.

I was sitting in the living room on a Saturday morning when my son walked in. I noticed a conspicuous lump in his groin region. I asked him to come over to me.

"What is that?" I asked, pointing in the appropriate direction.

"A car," he answered.

"A what?" I calmly inquired.

"A red race car," he said coolly. "I'm keeping it in my pocket while I eat breakfast."

"That is not a pocket, honey," I answered, trying hard not to bust out laughing.

"What is it, then?" he asked.

There are some questions a parent just does not know the answer to. But I was determined to find out, so I asked all my male friends.

Apparently they are as clueless as to the use of this alien formation of cotton as my son is. Oh, sure, they know what it was originally designed for, but no one I met actually uses it that way. Most of the men I talked to found the flap to be an inconvenience. But they still wear them.

There are those who wear boxers. I find these are usually the men who did not outgrow the thrill of wearing comic-book characters on Mr. Happy.

Then there are the wild among you, those who boldly go wherever the gravity may take you. To those, I salute you for being your own man.

Understanding between the sexes may someday be a reality, but the underwear divisions will rage on.

Access fee better be worth it

K-State has chosen to bow to popular demand and make it easier for off-campus computer users to log on and use the campus network from home.

For the low, low price of $5 a month for 15 hours of access, students can access the Internet and e-mail from home.

These new lines should cut the amount of time it takes to get a free line, and the chance that you will be bumped off will be reduced, also.

But are we really getting a better deal? Will these new lines make logging on in the fall easier, when there are more students using the system?

K-State students will now have to pay for access to the campus network. We just hope it's worth the expense.

Will the new lines be enough, or will the fee go up in a semester to pay for even more lines? And how much cheaper is that than other options in town?

All these questions need to be addressed by the students and administrators before we are charged five bucks.

Granted, K-State is in better shape than some schools that charge just to use the e-mail on campus, but we still have a long way to go before the Internet is accessible to everyone who wants to use it.

Hopefully these new lines will be the first of many steps in the right direction.

CLINTON UNFAIR TO HOMOSEXUALS

Editor, Frank Whitworth seems to think that queers would be better off reelecting President Clinton this fall ("Re-Elect Clinton," June 10).

As a queer who voted for Clinton in '92 (a mistake I won't make again) I beg to differ.

Bill Clinton has shown himself to be a consummate politician who will pander to the queer vote when it suits him but then shows his true colors when push comes to shove.

For every crumb that Clinton has thrown us, he has also slapped us in the face: his disastrous handling of the gays in the military issue, his refusal to have the Justice Department intervene in the Amendment 2 case (which, no thanks to Clinton, was struck down by the U.S. Supreme Court recently) and now his election-year posturing with the Defense of Marriage Act have all shown that Clinton cannot be trusted.

To me, voting for Bill Clinton isn't "choosing the lesser of two evils." It's "voting for Lucifer to keep Satan from getting elected." In other words, Clinton is not substantially better than Dole — both would be bad choices.

I do not believe in Clinton, I do not trust him, and I don't think he's fit to be president again. And I refuse to vote for a candidate I don't believe in.

His betrayal of my trust is so complete that I cannot in good conscience vote for him again.

Clinton's betrayal becomes even more infuriating because of his campaign's attitude toward people like me: He expects the queer vote, takes it for granted without having earned it.

Clinton (like many Democrats) assumes that I will have no choice but to vote for him again. Well, they have another think coming.

If I choose to vote for a third-party candidate this year, it is not "throwing my vote away," as Mr. Whitworth so sanctimoniously claims.

It is called "participating in the democratic process."

Whether or not the candidate I vote for wins is irrelevant; I will be able to sleep at night with a clear conscience, knowing that I voted my principles instead of political expediency.

It takes someone special, Dad

Father's Day is just around the corner, and I don't think this page would be complete without a sappy salute to my dad.

Most of you don't know this, but I wasn't always Sera Tank. I was born Sara Anderson (the first-name change is another story).

You see, like many people of my parents' generation, my mom married young. She married a man named Jim Anderson. Two good things came out of that marriage: my brother and me.

Well, it didn't last long, and after a divorce, she married my dad, Doug Tank. Now there's a great guy, let me tell you. He adopted us.

What other man would adopt my brother and me? Knowing what kind of a child I was, I'll tell you that not many would.

One time I told someone about my adoption, and she asked, "Aren't you mad that your real dad gave you up?"

First of all, Jim is not my "real" dad — he's my biological father. My real dad is Doug Tank. I don't remember ever calling him anything but Daddy — or Daaaaad when I'm mad.

Secondly, no, I'm not angry at Jim. Look what I got out of the whole deal. My daddy.

I've always been a Daddy's Girl. Dad and I have always had a great relationship. He's fun. When I go home, we don't really have to do anything. We just hang out, eat Mexican pizzas and french fries (not at the same time), play Scrabble and watch movies.

A little more than a year ago, my mom died. Of course it was hard for all of us, but I think it was hardest on Dad. I visited him almost every weekend for a while — for my own sake as much as his.

One day he asked me the weirdest thing. He said, "When you come visit me, do you feel like you're visiting your dad or just some guy who was married to your mom?"

It broke my heart in half to hear him say that. Apparently he was afraid that because we are not biologically related, my mom's death erased our only link.

I assured him that I have never thought of him as anything but my daddy. The fact that my mom died doesn't take away all he's done and all he's meant to me.

He was the one who cleaned up my mess when I got the flu on my eighth birthday, drove me to gymnastics at 6:30 in the morning, took out a second mortgage on the house so I could take gymnastics lessons, took pictures of me when I went to homecoming and the hundreds of other things he sacrificed and did for me.

Yeah, my dad's pretty cool, but don't think he doesn't get angry with me. I've been getting the same lecture since I was four years old: "You do everything too fast. You don't think. Listen to me when I'm telling you ..."

Somewhere around there I zone out. I have developed a theory that it wasn't really what he said when he lectured, but the sheer length of the lecture that deterred me from committing the same wrong twice. No one has ever accused Dad of being at a loss of words. That's probably where I get it from.

When my brother and I were adopted, we gave my dad a needlepoint picture. It still hangs in our house. It had a man playing with his two children. Sewn into the picture: "Anyone can be a father, but it takes someone special to be a daddy."

I think we should all remember that for Father's Day. And happy Father's Day to all the dads out there.

CAMPIN' with the CATS

With hoop dreams on their minds, area youth flock to K-State to learn from the Wildcats

Story by John Berggren
Photos by Jill Jarsulic

The 1996-97 K-State basketball team may appear somewhat young to people walking by Ahearn Field House this week.

K-State was sponsoring its annual Tom Asbury Basketball Camp for boys ages 8 to 18. The first edition of the camp ended Wednesday, and two more camps are set for mid-June and early August.

About 160 youths were enrolled in the camp. The camp focused on tuning up basketball skills for the players.

"This camp is a fundamentally based camp," assistant basketball coach Bob Hanson said. "We want to see kids' skills improve, and we also have contests such as dribbling, shooting and one-on-one matchups to test their improvement."

Children from across the Midwest attended the camp and were treated with the opportunity to practice alongside current and past K-State greats. Ayome May, Shawn Rhodes, Deryl Cunningham and Steve Henson were among collegiate representatives.

Sam Hook, a 13-year-old from Topeka, said this was not his first year at camp.

"This is my third year here," Hook said. "I just want to be a better player and more well-rounded. It's a lot of fun. I got a jersey and talked to Aaron Swartzendruber, and it was really exciting."

Antione Tweed, a 17-year-old from Denver, Colo., made his first trip to camp this year.

"My high school coach knew Coach Asbury, and he talked me into going here," Tweed said. "There is some good competition here, and it's helped develop my skills."

▲ JOHN SCHMIDT, Onaga, instructs third-, fourth- and fifth-graders on dribbling techniques during the Asbury Basketball Camp Tuesday afternoon. Students from all over the state participated in the camp this week in Ahearn Field House.

▲ ELEVEN-YEAR-OLD GRANT LACKAMP, Concordia, shoots three-pointers during the Asbury Basketball Camp. The campers were divided into groups for contests and practicing fundamentals.

Tweed said he had been to other camps in his home state.

"The Colorado University camp and this one are pretty much the same," Tweed said. "I thought they would be different, but they're both pretty good."

The atmosphere of the camp gives campers a peek at what college basketball is like.

"The drills and workouts are pretty tough," Tweed said. "There is a good coaching staff, and seeing actual college players here shows you a little bit about what it's like playing college ball."

May, a current K-State player, said he was happy to be a part of the camp.

"It's my choice to be here, and I'm glad to do it," May said. "Us players are role models to the kids, and on top of all of it we get paid to do it, too."

This is May's second year helping out with the camp. After spending last season as a redshirt freshman he said his popularity had changed.

"Last year nobody really knew who I was," May said. "This year it's totally different. More kids try to be around me. It's a good feeling to be around our young fans."

The daily routine for the campers consisted of a meeting with basketball coach Asbury for an hour every morning at 8:40. The campers then broke into stations for different drills, working on things like ball handling, defense and offense. After a lunch break, campers listened to guest speakers, like former K-Staters Cunningham and Henson. They then spent the rest of the day scrimmaging in game situations. The day concluded with a movie.

Campers had the option of staying just during the day for the camp or spending the night quartered in K-State residence halls.

Hanson said some of the younger kids were feeling somewhat homesick.

"We've had kids feeling homesick, and the flu was going around," Hanson said. "It's not easy to play basketball when you're not feeling too good."

Despite the minor health problems, the camp was an overall success for everyone.

"The kids come here because they want to be here and they want to learn," Hanson said. "We get great gratification to see kids improve and go on and play basketball later in life."

"It's also great for our program," Hanson said.

"It exposes and creates a lot of interest in our program, and it helps to build enthusiasm for K-State basketball."

Gridiron success reaps profit

Dan Lewerenz
sports writer

Eleven million dollars may seem like a lot of money to most students. But for the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics it is just enough to get by.

"There's things you'd like to do, but you can't," said Bob Cavello, director of business services for the athletic department.

"There's things we'd like to have that the athletic fee would have paid for."

But there just isn't enough money.

Take heart, Wildcat fans — there's no doom and gloom in this forecast. In fact, the recent success of the football team has helped the department turn a profit the last couple years. But at a school still trying to recover from the dark days of the late 1980s, when embarrassing teams and facilities required extensive borrowing to survive, administrators must consider every extra penny as a penny against that debt.

"The last couple years we've had a profit, and we've been able to pay a bit more (of the debt) off. Right now it sits at about $8 million," Cavello said. "But that's not a bad thing."

"If you think about where we were in terms of facilities and of our programs, we needed to borrow that money," he said.

"If you're an athlete and you're being offered the same full ride from two different schools, are you going to go to the one with the state-of-the-art facilities or the one with the bare minimum?"

Despite the profits of recent years, K-State still sits deep in the bottom half of the Big 12 in terms of athletic budgets.

Citing unofficial estimates (the official reports will be available in July), Cavello put K-State in the $11-12 million range, about even with Oklahoma State and ahead of Baylor at the bottom of the conference barrel.

The University of Texas, at Austin, and Nebraska, on the other hand, have budgets estimated in the mid-to upper-$20 million range.

The department has taken measures to raise additional monies. Football ticket prices have gone up as part of the deal maintaining the athletic fee at last year's rate. But for now, some projects have to be put on hold.

"Capital improvements, like new bathrooms (at the stadium), will have to wait," Cavello said. "But other priorities come first."

► K-STATE ATHLETICS

Fund benefits from athletics

Dan Lewerenz
sports writer

Last month five K-State students made a $5,000 contribution to the University's general scholarship fund.

Corby Kassebaum, senior in biochemistry; Allen Poppe, senior in biochemistry; Andy Wingert, senior in history and social sciences; Karlton Place, senior in civil engineering; and Shane Kaberline, senior in kinesiology, donated their winnings from the Pizza Hut Hoops 3-on-3 Road Trip.

The tournament, which mirrored the NCAA basketball tournament, invited 3-on-3 teams from participating institutions to compete for scholarship money. K-State's team made it to the "Elite Eight" before being eliminated.

While their contribution, made possible by K-State's invitation to the NCAA Tournament, might be the most direct link between successful athletics and increasing scholarship funds, hundreds of students could potentially benefit from revenue indirectly related to athletics.

Jim Buchheister, KSU Foundation controller, said the Foundation does benefit indirectly from the success of athletics.

"We're not trying to use athletics in our fund-raising efforts," he said. "But it sure makes a good conversation starter."

conversation-starter."

From those conversations come dollars. John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said the number of Catbacker clubs and members has skyrocketed in recent years — as has the money they give to the University.

"A lot of that is because the football team has been to three straight bowl games," Fairman said. "Last week I went to a golf tournament in Hiawatha hosted by the local Catbackers, where they auctioned off the K-State players. One team paid $130 for me. That wouldn't have happened three years ago."

Perhaps the greatest source of athletic-related revenue comes from product licensing, also overseen by Fairman. Officially licensed K-State products return 7.5 percent of their cost to the general scholarship fund.

When Fairman arrived in 1987, the football team was six years from its first bowl win, and licensing revenue was a whopping $7,000. This year Fairman estimates the licensing revenue will approach $280,000 — up $26,000 from last year.

Unlike some schools, where licensing revenue goes to the president's budget or to athletics, at K-State all of that money goes to the general scholarship fund.

Buchheister said while athletics may help encourage some donors, it is not the only factor in raising scholarship money for the University.

"It certainly doesn't hurt," Buchheister said. "I think people who donate to the general scholarship fund are probably looking for success in other areas, as well."

► BASKETBALL

Scoring threat rounds out roster

Dan Lewerenz
sports writer

The addition of 6'5" Marcus McCullough to the K-State basketball lineup completes the Wildcats' 1996-97 roster.

Did the Cats get what they were looking for?

"We've done a pretty good job with the high-school players, and coming out of junior college, Marcus gives us a little more maturity," Coach Tom Asbury said.

"He's a slasher/scorer, and he really knows how to put the ball in the basket," Asbury had said he was looking for a shooter to round out his recruiting class. While McCullough, who averaged nearly 20 points per game for Central College (24-9) in Olney, Ill., gives the Cats a proven scoring threat, Rick Ball, editor of Ballplayers Junior College Report, said McCullough is not a pure shooter.

"I would say he is more of a scorer than a shooter," Ball said. "The Ski Jones of the world are few and far between. But Marcus does know how to score."

Ball compared McCullough

both physically and athletically to K-State junior Mark Young. McCullough might be more of a scoring threat but is not the defensive stopper Young is, Ball said.

"Marcus can play both the off-guard and the small forward, and we liked that about him," Asbury said. "He gives us depth at a number of positions."

The addition of McCullough makes it possible for Young to return to the point, a position he has said he enjoys playing. Might Cat fans see Young, redshirt sophomore Ayome May and McCullough, three very similar players, on the floor at the same time?

"It's possible," Asbury said.

"Right now it's hard to evaluate what we might do."

Other additions to the 1996-97 Wildcat roster include junior center Dax Jones and freshman forward Pero Vasiljevic.

Freshman center Joe Leonard will likely redshirt next season, while sophomore point guard Chris Griffin becomes eligible this season after sitting out last year as a transfer from Washington State.

Sophomore point guard Duane Davis, a transfer from Arizona State, will sit out the '96-'97 season under NCAA transfer rules.

5th suspension in 6 years facing Belle

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Albert Belle, facing his fifth suspension in six years, is scheduled for a hearing today on the appeal of his five-game penalty.

American League president Gene Budig, who will hear the appeal, suspended Belle and Julian Tavarez for five games each on June 3 for their roles in a May 31 brawl between the Cleveland Indians and Milwaukee Brewers.

Tavarez's appeal has been scheduled for tomorrow. Milwaukee catcher Mike Matheny also was suspended for five games, and his hearing will be at a later date.

The Indians start a four-game series at the New York Yankees tonight. None of the suspensions can start until Budig rules on the appeals by the players' union.

Belle leads the majors with 24 homers and is on pace to break the mark of 61 for a season. A five-game suspension clearly would jeopardize his pursuit of Roger Maris' record.

Belle is accused of hitting Brewers second baseman Fernando Vina in the face with his forearm, setting off the fight. Tavarez slammed umpire Joe Brinkman to the ground, and Matheny charged the mound.

While Tavarez and Matheny were ejected, Belle was not.

The union contends a frame-by-frame review of videotape of the play shows Belle did not deliberately hit Vina with his forearm and merely slid into him.

"It is a clear there was no attempt to injure, and it was a legal hit, and that is why the umpires didn't do anything," union leader Donald Fehr said Tuesday.

Belle was fined $50,000 on Feb. 29 for a profane tirade during last year's World Series and $100 by an Ohio court last Nov. 28 after he was found guilty of reckless operation of a motor vehicle on private property.

He had chased teen-agers who threw eggs at his house on Halloween.

The outfielder was suspended by baseball every year from 1991-94 for offenses ranging from hitting a heckler with a thrown ball to corking his bat.

2 summer plays to open

Cynthia Fitzgerald
staff reporter

For about the price of a movie ticket, K-State Theatre is offering entertainment that cannot be found at the local cinema.

Two plays are opening at Nichols Theatre this week.

Opening at 8 tonight is "The Foreigner," written by Larry Shive.

"Arkansas Bear," a children's play, written by Aurand Harris, opens Saturday at 2 p.m.

"The Foreigner" is a wonderful comedy about how people fulfill their dreams and what makes a personality, director Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech, said.

It is the story of Charlie Baker, a sad, shy, British proofreader, who comes to America with his friend Froggy LeSeur, a British army explosives expert.

They wind up at a backwoods fishing lodge in southern Georgia. Froggy persuades Charlie to masquerade as a foreigner who cannot speak English.

All the humor of the play evolves out of this situation.

The play is filled with wacky characters, including a 73-year-old woman who collects spoons, a slow-witted boy who builds brick birds and a member of the Ku Klux Klan with a smile you can almost smell, MacFarland said.

"The play has a lot of heart and deals with how people relate to each other as human beings. It's full of surprises," she said.

She said there are no obscenities or parts with violence, so it is a good show for children to see, too.

"The play establishes family values in a weird sort of way," MacFarland said.

"Arkansas Bear" is scheduled for several matinee productions to cater to child audiences.

The story is told through the dreams of the main character, Tish, and the dancing bears in her dreams. When Tish's grandfather dies, she is upset and escapes to the forest. When she sits down to rest, she falls asleep and dreams.

In her dreams, Tish meets some dancing bears who teach her how to deal with the death of a loved one.

In one of the dream sequences, the big bear tells her the important way to deal with life is to go on and do something big for the living.

"The story is so tender. Even though it's a children's play, the themes are really more adult," MacFarland said. "It asks all the big questions people tend to ask about dying."

Roxanne Shea, a professionally trained dancer from the East Coast and former guest artist of K-State Theatre, has choreographed a variety of upbeat dances in the dream sequences for the bears.

Costume designer Marla Day, of the K-State Theatre costume shop, has created some bright costumes. MacFarland said this combination lightens up the theme a bit.

MacFarland is known for incorporating background music into non-musical settings.

She asked David Kamerer, guitarist and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, to arrange and record acoustic guitar music for the play.

Kamerer said he arranged two folk songs from the 1800s, one up-tempo song and one ballad.

"The songs we chose evoke different mood states to support the actors in the play," he said.

Many of the cast members perform in both productions. They also pull double-duty as the backstage crew.

"This has given the cast an experience similar to working in a professional theater production," MacFarland said.

Now playing

- "The Foreigner" will run June 13-15, 20-22 and 27-29.
 - "Arkansas Bear" will run June 15, 19, 22, 26, and 29.

Juneteenth festivities celebrate freedom

quick READ

► Juneteenth is a day honoring the last group of slaves freed in Texas on June 19, 1865. The festival is Saturday from 2-8 p.m. in Long's Park.

Nicole Kirby
staff writer

Manhattan will celebrate Juneteenth this Saturday in honor of the last slaves freed by the Emancipation Proclamation.

Although President Lincoln issued the proclamation on Jan. 1, 1863, the slaves in Texas were not notified until two years later, on June 19, 1865.

There are a number of explanations for the delay that have been suggested.

"One explanation is that a free man started out on a mule from Washington, D.C., and didn't arrive until two years later," Cornell Mayfield, one of the organizers of the Manhattan celebration, said.

Others have suggested the Texas farmers waited until the harvest season was over to notify their slaves of the proclamation.

The former slaves began celebrating the anniversary of their emancipation the following year.

"When those people spread across the country, they took the Juneteenth celebration with them," Mayfield said.

Juneteenth is celebrated throughout the United States and is an official holiday in Texas.

"In Manhattan, it started out in people's backyards with barbecues, and after a few years it became a big celebration," Mayfield said.

Juneteenth will be from 2 until 8 p.m. Saturday in Long's Park at 17th and Yuma streets.

In addition to the barbecues and socializing, the festivities include many other Juneteenth traditions.

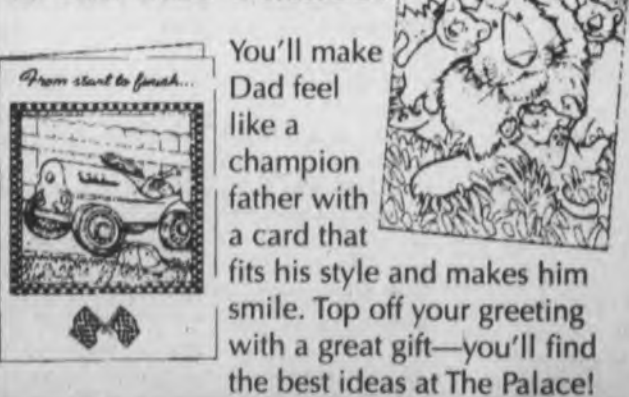

"There will be music, entertainers and food vendors," Mayfield said.

"There will also be storytelling and entertainment for the kids, and there will be educational displays, so it's both fun and educational."

K-177 development project

Highway construction is expected to be complete by August 1997. Seth Childs Road and K-177 near Tuttle Creek State Park will be expanded to four lanes, and the speed limit will be 70 mph.

Traffic congestion is expected throughout the summer. Travelers should plan their routes ahead of time to avoid delays.

NOLAN SCHRAMM/Collegian

Rains slow construction

Ashley Schmidt
staff reporter

Expansion of Kansas Highway 177 is on schedule, but recent rains have slowed construction.

"We had good working conditions over the winter," said Bruce McCallum, director of public works for the City of Manhattan. "The last three weeks have slowed them down considerably, but that is to be expected."

To help reduce delays on football game days in the fall, the Kansas Department of Transportation made special provisions with the contractor.

"We have told the contractor they cannot work on game days," Sandy Tommer, area engineer for KDOT, said. "There will still be a few delays, but nothing major."

Construction on K-177 from Interstate 70 to the junction of Kansas Highway 18 outside Manhattan is scheduled for completion in August 1997, Tommer said. The expansion cost $13.5 million.

The section of K-177 from the K-18 junction to Tuttle Creek Boulevard, a $12-million project funded by state and federal money, is scheduled for completion in September.

Once completed, K-177's speed limit will be 70 mph, but the highway's 45-mph section on the edge of town will remain the same until a traffic study is conducted, Tommer said.

So far, K-177 construction has caused only minor traffic delays, Tommer said.

Other roads in and around Manhattan are also under construction this summer, when traffic levels are lowest. Seth Childs Road and K-177 near Tuttle Creek State Park are also being expanded from two lanes to four lanes, McCallum said.

"This summer there is going to be a high amount of traffic congestion," he said. "People are going to have to be patient and choose ahead of time what routes they are going to take."

Other construction beginning in Manhattan includes the area of McCall Road that curves into Frontage Road, which is being replaced. Until construction on the road is complete, there is no direct access between the two roads.

Construction is also under way at the intersection of Sunset Avenue and College Heights Road.

Northbound traffic on Sunset Avenue is being detoured, and eastbound and westbound traffic on College Heights Road is restricted.

FOOD

Restaurant to expand

Lori Richter
staff reporter

Humam Express plans to double its seating capacity with the construction of a 592-foot expansion. The addition will include a dining area, expanded kitchen facilities and bathrooms.

"We have to compete with other restaurants, and the improvements will help us do that," Young Hoi Willingham, owner, said.

The addition of new kitchen appliances will allow the restaurant to become more efficient and contribute to the overall quality of the food, Willingham said.

New items will be added to the menu, but management does not see an increase in prices.

An estimated 80 percent of the customers the restaurant serves are college students.

"We want to give the students what they want," Willingham said, "lots of quality food that is affordable."

Ballard, and they played their first organized basketball games together. "It was a great thrill to watch him play for K-State," Kershaw said. During college Ballard was 6 feet, 1 inch, and weighed 170 pounds, but according to those who knew him, it was something inside that made him great. "People would ask, 'How does Sonny always win?' It was because he just tried harder," Steve Douglas, a former Manhattan High School and K-State teammate, said. Douglas said it was the opportunity to continue playing basketball with Ballard that influenced his decision to attend K-State. Ballard was known for his quiet demeanor and dry sense of humor. "He was something of a character, but he also had a lot of character," Douglas said.

When Ballard was teased about his speech impediment as a child, he always took the ridicule in good spirits. "He was never afraid to poke fun of himself," Kershaw said. Ballard's love of athletics helped him when he took control of his father's store in Aggieville in 1975. "He liked working with people," Steve Ballard, Ballard's son, said. According to his son, Ballard took a special liking to the screen-printing part of the business, especially doing orders for K-State greys. Other friends of Ballard remembered that he enjoyed employing and working with college students in Aggieville, and he also enjoyed meeting his buddies at Kite's Bar and Grill. Ballard was a member of the Chamber of Commerce and its board of directors, among other organizations. Services were held for Ballard Wednesday. Memorials can be sent to the First Lutheran Church or the Sunset Zoo Wildlife Conservation Trust.

"State government can govern better," he said. "We need to keep the federal government out of state issues." Snowbarger said balancing the federal budget and education were important. "We need to make higher education available to everyone," he said. In the first district, the race was blown open when Roberts announced he would run for Kassebaum's seat. The second district will be busy as four new faces, one Democrat and three Republicans, compete for the seat. That one Democrat, John Frieden, is a "non-professional politician," press secretary Joe Myers said. "It threw the whole state into a scramble," Myers said about Dole's resignation. Myers said with Brownback out of the second-district race, it would be easier for Frieden. "I decided to run because it is the right thing to do," Frieden said in his announcement speech Monday. Frieden said education is the future.

"Students no longer just compete with the student sitting next to them in class," he said. "Students are competing against the best and finest in the world." The fourth district has remained fairly quiet, as Republican incumbent Todd Tiahrt and Democrat Randy Rathbun begin their campaigns. With many seats vacant in the Senate and the House of Representatives, new faces will be representing Kansas after the Nov. 5 elections.

Tasker said five of the horses that were donated in the past will be at this year's ride. "All proceeds go to benefit American Cancer Society for research, education and patient services. Pledges collected remain within northeast Kansas," Barngrover said. Tasker said the first trail ride in 1989 grossed $8,000 in pledges and T-shirt sales. Tracy Gregg, American Cancer Society representative, said this will be her first trail ride. "The Brushbusters Riding Club has been more than helpful. It takes someone to have a big heart to put so many hours into an event like this," she said.

KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY MANHATTAN, KANSAS

Local candidates vie for state seat

Today, the Collegian begins a three-part series taking a look at those candidates running for state and local offices.

Kansas House of Representatives
- ✓ THURSDAYPART TWO
Kansas Senate
- ✓ MONDAYPART THREE
County and city

With state elections coming up, a common stance among candidates in Manhattan is a commitment to education.

In the 62nd district the choice is between incumbent Republican Kent Glasscock and Democratic challenger Robert Littrell.

Glasscock, who has served three terms in the House of Representatives, said he felt experienced and excited at the prospects.

"I'm ready to go back and do battle," Glasscock said.

Glasscock, who practices law in Manhattan when the House is not in session, said he had four things he planned on fighting for if reelected.

One was the health and vitality of K-State. The second was for the health and vitality of public education. The third was about the tax burden, and the fourth surrounds public safety.

"My goals would be to fight for fair funding for the University and higher education," Glasscock said.

He said the tuition retention program would allow universities like K-State to keep much of the increased tuition, instead of dumping it into a pool along with the other educational institutions in the state.

Because of the older program, K-State and the University of Kansas have struggled financially, Glasscock said.

"This allows K-State to begin catching up," Glasscock said.

"Tuition retention is a mechanism that we use to even out the discrepancies between the universities," he said.

Glasscock said the crime issues are at the top of the charts of activity and debate.

"The issues are complex and fascinating," Glasscock said. "Some defy resolution. The process itself is so interesting. It really is fun."

The reason Robert Littrell decided to run was because he likes doing good things for people, and being in the Legislature would be a way he could do quite a bit of good, he said.

"I've accumulated a lot of experience in my career as an attorney," Littrell said. "And one of the best parts of it is that I've been able to help lots of people."

Littrell is a longtime native of Manhattan. He is a graduate of Manhattan High School and K-State.

After law school he returned and has worked here ever since. Littrell's father was on the faculty of the College of Education, and his wife is on the faculty of the music department.

"If I'm elected," Littrell said, "there will be no greater proponent of Kansas State University in the legislature."

Littrell points to the need for more appropriations for K-State in order to raise faculty salaries up to the level of peer institutions, as well as other positive changes. Littrell also would like to see more access to the Internet in public schools.

Voters living in the 66th district will choose between Democratic incumbent Sheila Hochhauser and Republican challenger Jeff Peterson.

Hochhauser said she decided to run because moderate, sensible people are at a premium in the Legislature.

She also pointed to her position on the Appropriations Committee and noted that the possibility exists that next year she would be the only member from a town with a Kansas Board of Regents institution.

One of Hochhauser's primary concerns, she said, is education. Positive votes from the last year, she said, were not cutting public school budgets on K-12 and not cutting the K-State budget. She noted, however, that with so many other programs taking cuts, it was impossible to get increases.

On the qualified admissions policy, Hochhauser voted no, pointing to studies that show real wage increase is directly related to level of education.

One of Hochhauser's education initiatives is modeled after a program in Georgia called the Hope Scholarship Program.

"This program," she said, "would take the interest earned on the state's idle funds and pay tuition for any student who earned a 3.0 average in high school or in college."

Hochhauser has an economic development committee doing research on how to Student Body President Chris Hansen will attend the Students' Advisory Committee meetings this Friday and Saturday in Topeka and Lawrence.

The SAC is made up of all six Kansas Board of Regents schools and meets at least nine times a year at the monthly regents meetings.

"The board is set up so that all schools have an equal voice," John Welsh, director of academic affairs for the regents, said.

"This group definitely has an impact on the decisions that the regents make," Welsh said. "The board provides commentary on any issues that are relevant to students, which are most of them."

Welsh said the board is self-regulated and his purpose is to be a liaison between the SAC and regents.

Hansen has been selected as the chairman for the committee for the upcoming year. He was elected by the other five members of the committee.

The board will discuss issues such as communication about higher education, unified health insurance, tuition cost, financial aid, faculty evaluations, campus

University brings tax money to city

Darren Whitley
staff reporter

The annexation of the K-State campus in 1994 added 4,567 people to Manhattan's population, according to U.S. Census Bureau estimates.

Each person has a tax value of $51.75 to the city, which translates to an additional $118,000 in tax revenue for the city this year. Annually, it will create an additional $236,300.

The correction of a 1994 census update makes the city eligible for more tax money from the county.

"Now Manhattan is getting a larger share of the Riley County pie," Diane Stoddard, assistant to the city manager, said.

Three different taxes the city receives money from are affected by the change.

Money from city/county revenue sharing, gasoline taxes and local sales taxes are allotted according to the population.

Revenue-sharing money comes from a portion of the state sales tax. The state also collects gasoline taxes. Both are distributed to the counties and cities in proportion to their populations.

Stoddard brought the Census Bureau's attention to the importance of the change from the 1993 population ■ National excavators and archeologists tear into Fort Riley in search of ancient artifacts.

Glass fragments, lead sediment and bone segments are being used to date Fort Riley excavation sites back more than 1,000 years.

"We're trying to locate structures through artifacts that would tell us what people were doing and where they occupied the area," said University of Illinois archeologist Paul Kreisa.

Kreisa is one of the archeologists working on several excavation sites on the Fort Riley post. In May archeologists started conducting remote sensing on several areas.

Following the remote sensing, a team began digging up several areas that appeared to be potential historical sites.

The entire summer will be dedicated to researching the excavation sites. In the fall K-State archeology students will be visiting the sites once a week as part of their class curriculum.

"We are doing this project to test the quality of the land to detect the eligibility for National Register for Historic and Prehistoric Sites," said John Dendy, an archeologist for Dynamic Corp.

If any of the sites meet the criteria of the National Register they can be protected. If the area does register they must also follow certain guidelines in protecting and causing impact to the area.

A total of 22 sites are being surveyed on the Fort Riley post.

Dendy said they are currently using the traditional method of surveying the land, which involves using surface cues to determine whether or not the area has historic potential under the surface.

Surface cues include elevations or crevices in the land, or lack of growth in a certain area.

Dendy said almost any object can be used for observation.

Bone fragments are used to determine what individuals ate, and pottery pieces can indicate the people's socioeconomic level.

He said objects such as nails and pottery are the easiest artifacts used to determine time periods.

"Brick and structural materials are the toughest to date," he said. "They are difficult because they are just fragments, or they have been used for so long that you cannot date them specifically."

Dendy said there have been some surprises in the articles found. A projectile point dating back 8,000 to 10,000 years ago was found on the post.

The point is thought to have Paleo-Indian characteristics, which Dendy said is rare for the area.

Kreisa said the process of putting together the pieces into a historical pattern also involves research of public records and photographs of the area.

"You try to integrate history, elements and documents," Kreisa said.

The end result, according to Kreisa, is a detailed account of history about the land and the people who inhabited it.

... (Brick and structural materials) have been used for so long that you cannot date them specifically.

DIVIDED COUNTRY

story by nicole kirby

For K-State students and faculty with ties to Russia, yesterday's presidential election was of strong interest.

Irina Khramtsova, non-degree graduate student in education, followed newspaper coverage of her native country's political climate closely.

"I hope everything will be fine, so there will be no violence and everything will be fine with the process itself," she said.

Khramtsova predicted the incumbent candidate, Boris Yeltsin, would win, but she did not think he was the ideal president.

"The war in Chechnya — I don't like it at all," she said. "I used to support him with all my heart and mind, but now I am not sure."

Another Russian student, Mikhail Korenman, graduate student in education, said that Yeltsin would win, but he thought the race would be so close as to require a run-off election.

Like Khramtsova, Korenman said Yeltsin was not what Russia needs, but he said Yeltsin was the best choice.

"It's not a big choice. The choice is between Yeltsin and communism," Korenman said. "The country needs not a good politician, but a good economist. Yeltsin is not a good economist. All his career, he has been a politician."

Yeltsin's competitor is Gennady Zyuganov of the Communist Party.

The possibility that Zyuganov could win and bring communism back to the country has caused worldwide controversy.

However, many believe the kind of communism that used to exist in Russia could never return.

"Even if it did win, it's not the same communism," Korenman said. "They have to change things."

Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages, who teaches Russian and recently took a group of students to Russia, expressed similar beliefs.

"I don't see a return to the kind of communism that there was before," Kolonosky said. "There has been too much progress on SUPERINTENDENT RESIGNS. The Kansas City School District's acting superintendent has resigned after a tumultuous school-board subcommittee meeting. Larry Ramsey resigned Friday, saying he could no longer work in a place where some administrators and the school board act worse than the children they are supposed to lead.

The immediate cause for the resignation was an emotional meeting Thursday night. Ramsey felt his authority had been undermined by a rival administrator and board members.

DOLE CLOSES LEAD. Buoyed by a new round of promising polls, Bob Dole heads to New Jersey's electoral battleground feeling more like a winner.

A Time-CNN survey gave Clinton a 6 percentage point lead over Dole among registered voters, narrowing the gap by 16 points.

OPERATION RESCUE. Five years ago, Operation Rescue put Wichita in the national spotlight by staging anti-abortion protests that led to more than 2,700 arrests. Next month, the group plans to return to celebrate the anniversary of the "Summer of Mercy." Larry Menestrina, the group's coordinator, said rallies and prayer services are scheduled from July 19 to 21. He said the group is hoping to attract "peaceful, prayerful people."

► INTERNATIONAL

PEACE BLASTED. A bomb exploded in a van near a shopping center in Manchester, England Saturday, injuring 206 people in a whirlwind of glass and debris. The prime ministers of Britain and Ireland blamed the IRA.

No one immediately claimed responsibility. But the attack, just six days after the opening of peace talks in Northern Ireland, shattered any hopes that the IRA's supporters would soon be allowed to join the negotiations.

REFUGEES MISSING. A ship carrying hundreds of Liberian refugees was missing and possibly in distress Sunday off the West African coast, but bad weather blocked search efforts. A five-hour aerial search off Ivory Coast and Ghana on Saturday failed to turn up.

The Zolotitsa, which has about 450 people on board, left the Liberian capital May 26 to flee fighting among rival factions. It has been refused permission to enter several West African countries.

► NATIONAL

KACZYNSKI INDICTEMENT. An indictment charging Theodore Kaczynski with Unabomber-related crimes is expected Tuesday in Sacramento, Calif., where two people were killed by package bombs blamed on the elusive serial bomber, a federal source says.

Kaczynski, 54, has been jailed in Helena, Mont., without bond since his arrest April 3. He currently faces only a federal charge of possessing bomb-making materials.

FBI FILES. The White House and FBI impose strict new controls on requests for bureau background files as FBI director Louis Freeh discloses that the Clinton administration sought data on 408 people "without justification."

FREEMEN SURRENDER. After 81 days of following their own rules, the Freeman got a stern introduction to the federal law they don't recognize. While most of the 14 Freeman sat quietly during their initial court appearance Friday, others argued with the judge and one had to be restrained by marshals.

CAMPAIGN CORRUPTION. Two bankers appointed to state positions after contributing to President Clinton's 1990 gubernatorial campaign go on trial today, accused of stealing from their own bank to cover political contributions.

► SPORTS

WORLD CUP. At least 15 soccer fans were crushed to death and 52 others injured during a stampede following Zambia's victory over Sudan in a World Cup qualifying game Sunday. At least six fans died on the spot as several thousand fans rushed from Lusaka's Independence Stadium to catch a glimpse of their victorious team.

BULLS WIN TITLE. The Chicago Bulls won too many games to risk the title that was their destiny to a Game 7. After letting the Seattle SuperSonics back into a series that looked like it would end in a sweep, the Bulls finished them off with a 87-75 victory Sunday night in Game 6 of the NBA Finals. Jordan had 22 points, nine rebounds and seven assists, and was named the finals' most valuable player. The victory capped 7 1/2 months of unprecedented success for the Bulls, who set an NBA record with 72 regular-season wins.

Gay activists march

KYLE WYATT/Collegian

DEANE HARRINGTON and Sue Oswalt, both of Topeka, wave to participants during the first Les/Bi/Gay Pride Parade Saturday morning in Topeka. The event, which ended on the steps of the Kansas Statehouse, was sponsored by the Unity and Pride Alliance. The parade was among a series of events including a variety of workshops and lectures to support gay and lesbian pride and to counter the extreme hate and negativity they face in Topeka, Sam Van Leeuwen, an organization member, said.

MEMBERS OF THE FRED PHELPS family and the Westboro Baptist Church protest the gay pride parade from the edges of the Capitol grounds. No incidents occurred as the parade passed the protestors.

DISMISSAL

University dismisses almost 700 students because of low GPAs

Nearly 700 K-State students will not be returning to K-State this fall. University Registrar Donald Foster said 697 students were dismissed and 2,014 students were placed on academic warning out of the 18,533 students enrolled last spring.

William Feyerharm, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said students are dismissed for a variety of reasons, and most are freshmen.

He said students never had to study in high school, and others get involved in new activities and lose focus.

Stefan Yates, junior in English, was placed on academic warning his second year at K-State.

"Engineering just wasn't the right field for me," he said. Yates said he was not sure what he wanted to do when he finished high school.

"I picked a major that I thought would be interesting, but it turned out that I didn't like it," Yates said.

Ray Hightower, assistant dean of the College of Engineering, said he estimated 85 percent of those dismissed from engineering are working too many hours at a job.

Hightower said the other 15 percent are dismissed because of extenuating circumstances.

The academic dismissal and warning policies are found in the Undergraduate Catalog.

Freshmen earning less than a 1.0 grade point average for their first semester are immediately dismissed.

Continuing students earning less than a 1.0 GPA may not register for the next semester until their cases are reviewed by a dean.

Foster said the requirement of 1.0 GPA for freshmen means a lot of students get dismissed after the fall semester.

A student who falls under a 2.0 GPA is placed on academic warning.

If students continue under a 2.0, they can be dismissed.

Hightower said students are sent a letter once they are placed on warning. If a student is then dismissed, they must meet with the Academic Standards Committee for whatever college they seek to reenter.

He requires dismissed students to create a petition to be reinstated.

"I want them to deal with this in a formal way," Feyerharm said. "It is good for them to state their case."

Petitions should tell what happened and what students plan to do to help themselves.

Students meet one-on-one with him. "In many cases, I use that meeting to explain why it is to their advantage to lay out of school," he said.

The Academic Standards Committee for the College of Engineering is composed of one person from each of the eight departments.

"We treat each situation as an individual situation," Hightower said. "There is no yes-you-can or no-you-can't concept. We listen to their situation."

A dismissed student is required to stay out of school two semesters if immediate reentry is denied.

"Statistics show a student is best served by going out and working and getting away from any kind of coursework," Hightower said.

Students who stay out a year or more usually come back with a plan, Feyerharm said.

Mark*, a former engineering student at K-State, was dismissed when he got involved in activities other than school. He plans to seek reentry into K-State for spring 1997.

"It was my fault the way things happened," Mark* said. "They gave me a chance. They warned me."

Help is available for students on warning.

Feyerharm said he encourages the departments to make contact with the students.

He suggests they take study skills courses and remedial courses to prepare them better.

He also suggests they contact the Academic Assistance Center.

The College of Engineering offers new student orientation sessions to help students get adjusted.

"Students should never give up," Hightower said. "It is a temporary interruption in their goals for an education."

Mark is a pseudonym given to an actual student who was dismissed from school and due to the nature of the article, requested his name be changed.

Summer fun easy to find in Manhattan

There has been more than enough complaining that there is nothing to do in Manhattan during the summertime.

The city is full of arts and entertainment for people of all ages. There is a ton of fun stuff to do in June alone.

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Arts in the Park series in City Park is free for everyone. It consists of such acts as musical events, plays and puppet shows. It is an informal, fun event with lots of children and families.

This month the series will feature such bands as Blueberry Monsters, Mainstreet and the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra.

During July the program will feature a Municipal Band Concert, Mike Bishop and Sweet 'n' Sassy, Turquoise Sol, Joseph Mills, Streetside and Firefall.

For children, Arts in the Park will have puppet shows all summer.

There are also children's theater camps. Also, children are given the opportunity to participate in a play. Summer Youth

Nothing to do?
Manhattan is full of fun and interesting entertainment for people of all ages.

Production will be performing "Carousel" at 7:30 p.m. July 26-27 and at 2 p.m. July 28 in McCain Auditorium. There is a small admission charge for this event.

But Manhattan Parks and Recreation is not the only resource for entertainment.

Country Stampede will grace us June 21-23 at the Tuttle Creek State Park River Pond Area. People can choose to go to only one day or all three days. There are also camping passes available to those who opt to go to all three days.

K-State Theatre will feature "The Arkansas Bear" June 19, 22, 26 and 29 for children. For adults, it will perform the comedy "The Foreigner."

Sports fans can attend Wildcat Track and Field Camp June 23-27 at R.V. Christian Track. There will also be a Kansas Park and Recreation Volleyball Tournament June 29.

So get off your butt and attend some of these events.

They are fun, but if no one attends, we will not be able to have them anymore.

TOLES

Farrell Library wall served K-State as a place for expression

Have you seen it? It is gone. Only a simple fence remains.

Its cross-hatched pattern of metal reminds us of the collective pain from almost two years ago. The wall is gone.

Can you remember? Way back in spring 1995, the construction turned on the west face of Farrell (or is it Hale?).

myVIEW

Rhett
HARTMAN

Probably because of safety and liability, the construction company put up a very quaint wall to surround the construction area. The wall was made of plywood, I think. It was bare and seemed to be whispering to its passers-by, "Hey, decorate me. Paint me. Your creativity. My wall. Let's get together..." Ensuing was a barrage of visual delights. The wall was decorated with various quotes, pictures and other interesting aphorisms. Then, just when things started to get good, someone decided to do something about it.

Coincidentally enough, Family Weekend was approaching, and the artwork on the wall was destroyed.

Someone paid upwards of $400 to paint the entire thing purple, hoping to purge the wanton ways of those crazy artisans wielding massive amounts of spray paint and imagination.

I don't know if this was done by the construction company or the administration of K-State (or a combination), but the entire wall was now a plain purple. Yet, the next morning, among the dawn's first rays, those wacky wayfarers of artwork struck again. This time, they were not messing around.

The next morning (and I only heard about this — I did not actually see it) there was a barrage of artwork, set on the purple background.

There was supposedly an incredible mural about Gargamel and some smurfs, too. I mean, it is just a cartoon, but the people from whom I heard about it said the wall had become the Sistine Chapel of K-State. As far as painted walls go, this was something incredible.

Yet after seeing this, the mysterious entity that painted the wall purple took action again.

This time, the entire wall was replaced by a fence, and from the inside a camouflaged tarp was used to separate the students from the construction. This is what has stood since then, until about a week ago.

Now, as of sometime two weeks ago, the construction has simmered down on the west side of Farrell, and the totalitarianistic tarp has been taken away.

The new, beautiful facade can be seen in its holistic glory, but the scars of "The Wall" remain.

As far as students' lives go, when students are given a chance to create something in class, they always have a grade over their head.

In the "real world" they have a reputation or a job. The wall represented the absence of these pressures, and it allowed people to reveal what is mostly hidden in our day-to-day lives.

Every campus should have a wall. And it should be painted over every month or so.

How wonderful that would be! Kind of like the wooden desks of Denison and Seaton, which are covered with some of the greatest pithy moments of recent K-State history.

The point is, in an institution as large as K-State, its individuals can very easily be separated. Do you feel connected to the people you walk by every day on campus just because they are fellow students or faculty? Probably not. This dissociation is what makes us less of a school and more of a bunch of people.

What I would like to see someday is a time where people have faith that everybody, even complete strangers, desires to know everyone else (with-in reason, of course). Too many times have I been confronted with attitudes of avoidance and encouragements to estrangement.

I believe the closed-minded atmosphere is partially to blame for this — an atmosphere that paints over individual creativity and slaps the hands of those who wish to try something unacceptable but new.

I know our days of freedom could be close at hand, and the minds of our students hold such ideas, but that is not enough for an entire group of people to change.

What we need to complement our change in attitude is a change in our environment.

Is the wall a panacea? I doubt it. But through our expressions, could it help us learn about ourselves? I believe so.

So, until there is a wall present, I give you a prescription.

Do not second-guess other people's attitudes as negative. Believe everyone will smile at you if you smile back. Believe (even if you know you are wrong) your fellow humans will greet you with every "Hello" you voice.

Otherwise, our lives will be a lazy river swimming with colorless fish. I would like to ride the rapids and eventually have a wall on which to paint my ideas. I would like a wall where the colorful fish I see come to life again.

The K-State WALL of '95

Credibility an issue again for Clinton

Though President Clinton told an MTV audience he often wears boxers, it's been his briefs getting him into trouble lately.

Well, not his briefs per se. It had more to do with the fact that he had a bunch of the FBI's briefs.

At issue are more than 340 FBI personal files the White House had collected in the last couple of years.

Supposedly the files were to be used for hiring purposes, though most were on Republicans, including high-ranking

Reagan- and Bush-administration officials.

White House officials claim the entire incident is a big mistake.

The wrong files were requested, and when the mistake was discovered, they stopped the review process.

The Republicans, of course, have a different take on the situation.

In what they call the biggest abrogation of civil rights by a White House since Watergate, Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich and his followers have called for an independent investigation.

I think both sides are a bit off on this one. It was a mistake. Yes, it was a violation of the privacy of those involved.

Yes, it does resemble the embarrassing actions of a former president, actions that might have helped remove him from office.

But Watergate? Please. Ever since President Nixon became the first president forced to resign, Republicans have prayed for a Democratic scandal of such magnitude.

This is not the one, fellas. Rather, it is reminiscent of Bush's examination of a State Department file on Clinton, hoping to find evidence of anti-American activity during his trips abroad, particularly his visit to the Soviet Union.

Clinton and the Democrats were understandably outraged, and Clinton swore if he was elected, the State Department's private files would not be used for political motives.

Good thing State Department files are not used for hiring purposes, eh, Bill?

The Clinton administration must think Americans are dumber than we look to try this "it-was-an-accident-and-we-stopped-when-we-realized-the-mistake" story.

myVIEW

Dan
LEWERENZ

It does not take 340 files from A to G to determine someone made a boo boo.

One would think the file labeled "Baker, James A., III" would have tipped somebody off — the guy served in how many cabinet posts under both Reagan and Bush?

What interest could the Clinton White House have had in hiring him?

Once again, Clinton has failed the credibility test. The victim of "Republican dirty tricks" in 1992, he recovered to win the White House.

He did so by convincing the majority of Americans the allegations about his lack of character were false.

Now, it appears he has stooped to the level of his opponents. Even worse, he has done something he explicitly said he would not do.

If the election stays with issues, Clinton has a legitimate chance to retain his seat. But if it becomes a character question, the president is likely to find his chances shot.

And the smoking gun will be in his own underwear drawer.

Storm-chasing not as simple as people think

A fast car, a video camera and they're ready to chase Mother Nature's most violent and unpredictable force.

Then again, maybe not. John Skare, severe weather observer, heard some students discussing what the essentials to storm-chasing included.

It takes a lot more. Skare, a member of Weather Amateur Radio Network, a Riley County severe weather observer organization, has been monitoring storms for 20 years.

WARN members are trained volunteers licensed by the Federal Communications Commission as amateur radio operators and have taken severe weather observation courses.

When the Warner Brothers movie "Twister" opened at Seth Child Cinema a few weeks ago, WARN had an information table set up in the lobby. The members of WARN said "Twister" might give some people who see the movie ideas about tornado-chasing.

WARN wants to make sure people have the facts about the dangers involved.

"It's amazing how many people actually believe that all you need is a fast car and a video camera, and you're equipped to chase a tornado," Skare said.

"We call those people yahoos. Storm-spotting and tornado-chasing involves a lot of danger and are for people who have had actual training in severe weather observation. It's not for inexperienced thrill-seekers," he said.

The severe weather observers, or spotters, work with the Riley County emergency management office. Members use their own equipment and take responsibility for their own safety.

Each spotter has primary and secondary post assignments on hills throughout Riley and Geary counties. Each post has two exits if needed.

In the event of a storm watch, about ten of the spotters are contacted by the Riley County emergency management coordinators via radio.

The direction the storm is moving accounts for which posts will be used.

The spotters remain in their cars and communicate back to Phyllis Dillman. Dillman is usually posted at the emergency management operators center, located in the basement of the Riley County jail.

Pat Collins, Emergency Management Preparedness coordinator, who founded WARN in 1991, and Julie Eichem, Emergency Management Preparedness assistant coordinator, keep watch at the radar. Dillman updates them with the spotters' reports until the storm dissipates.

Norman Dillman, professor of electrical and computer engineering and a spotter, teaches an eight-week course at K-State during the spring called Amateur Radio Club, an amateur radio license preparation course.

Collins and Eichem make the decisions, based on incoming information from radar and spotters, and announce a severe storm watch or warning. They are also responsible for when sirens are sounded.

George Clark, professor of geology, teaches Natural Disasters, a course offered at K-State. He believes the movie "The Wizard of Oz" has caused misconceptions about tornadoes in Kansas.

"People who aren't from Kansas are sometimes under the impression we see tornadoes on a daily basis. Oklahoma and Texas have more tornadoes, hail and severe thunderstorms than Kansas, although Kansas gets its share," he said.

• MYTH. Areas near rivers, lakes and mountains are safe from tornadoes.

foundations of DESTRUCTION

1 Thunderstorms act as the planet's cooling system by absorbing hot, moist air from the ground. When temperatures vary severely between the atmosphere and the ground, the air rises, condenses and forms cumulus clouds — the first stage of a developing thunderstorm. It is at this point tornado watches and thunderstorm warnings are issued.

2 The upward movement of air — an updraft — causes cumulus clouds to grow and push air farther into the cloud. This heated updraft collides with cold air and creates turbulent winds. The winds are forced into a violent upward spin, laying the foundation for a tornado. Air spiraling into the bottom of the cloud can form a wall cloud, a telltale sign of an imminent tornado.

3 The momentum of the upward-spinning mesocyclone generates sufficient strength to extend a funnel below the cloud base until it reaches the ground. The funnel spins at unbelievable speeds, picking up debris and dust in its path. Funnel may last from less than a minute to more than an hour, with its circumference being a few feet to several miles.

It's a fair game

Junction City resident Perry Sharp referees NCAA basketball games, and life for him is no less than interesting

Story by Natalie Yakel

The excitement in the coliseum mounts as the clock ticks down. A police officer knocks on the door, waiting to escort the referee onto the floor.

The referee's adrenaline flows as he runs through the tunnel and suddenly emerges before thousands of fans. The booing chants begin.

Perry Sharp, NCAA basketball official and Junction City resident, experiences this routine nightly. Since 1991 he has traveled across the United States between November and March, officiating about 60 games each season, six nights a week.

Sharp said his officiating career started during a men's league game. After giving Sharp several technical fouls in one game, the official walked off the floor and told Sharp to do it himself.

That night, Sharp picked up the whistle and began a career of officiating through men's leagues, to high school and on to the collegiate level.

The most unusual event Sharp said he has ever encountered occurred during a Midnight Madness scrimmage at the University of Texas.

President Clinton was supposed to appear at the university the next day, and fans had to arrive three hours early for security checks.

Sharp was escorted onto the court, and the fans were frustrated because the teams did not have a game ball. Sharp went to retrieve a ball and was confronted by a Secret Service agent.

The agent suspected there was a substance inside the ball and ordered it to be

X-rayed. Finally, after the ball was found clean, the scrimmage was allowed to begin. Sharp has never worked in the Big 8 Conference but is anxious to find out who gets appointed as commissioner of the Big 12 Conference.

"Depending on who gets appointed, I might have a chance of seeing these teams on a regular basis, since I have worked in the Southwest Conference," Sharp said.

Sharp has officiated three Midnight Madness games for K-State.

He has worked with the K-State coaching staff in conducting an officials camp for the last several years. The camp is held at the end of June and teaches Division I referees how to become better officials.

"Officials can learn more in a two-day camp than they can in one or two years on the court," Sharp said.

Once Sharp ejected about 1,000 students from a game between Eastern New Mexico and West Texas A&M. A player ran into the stands and started a fight, resulting in a riot between the students.

Sharp had to throw the fans out, because it was the only way to gain control. The fight caused so much chaos it attracted TV stations, helicopters and state police.

"I thought my career was over," Sharp said.

Two weeks later, Sharp was called back to work a playoff game in the same gymnasium. The authorities said the officials handled everything in a legitimate fashion. Sharp said he went from thinking his career was over to having his biggest break.

Overall, Sharp said, his has been a rewarding career, and fairness is the most important aspect. He maintains control of each game by demanding respect from players and coaches.

KYLE WYATT/Collegian

PERRY SHARP, Junction City, has traveled across the nation as an NCAA referee for the past five years. Sharp began his officiating career nine years ago. During the regular season he is out of town five nights a week, Sharp said.

Sharp's goal is to reach the next level and become an NBA official within the next two years. Although he is happy at the collegiate level, NBA officials make a salary of about $90,000 a year.

Sharp said the biggest drawback is the enormous travel time, which keeps him away from home and his wife, Melissa, the women's basketball coach at Junction City High School.

This summer Sharp is working as an on-air personality for a radio station in Junction City, KJCK-AM 1420.

Severe hearing loss affects Orioles' lineup

Sixteen innings is a long time.

As a matter of fact, Saturday night it took a whopping four hours and 41 minutes for 16 innings to pass.

In that time, a lot of interesting things happened. For one thing, there was a Royals game going on, a 7-6, extra-inning battle against Davy Jones and the Baltimore Orioles. It was the longest game innings-wise in the majors so far this season.

Weren't the O's supposed to be laden with talent this season? Weren't they supposed to cause some serious damage in the American League?

Aside from the damage Brady Anderson's home runs do to baseballs once they hit the bat, those birds from Maryland seemed pretty puny to me.

Take Bobby Bonilla — even the fans couldn't help but berate him in the right-field stands.

"Hey, Bobby. Why don't you go back to San Francisco?" and then a slew of racial slurs that I choose not to repeat.

myVIEW

Shana NEWELL

I saw the great Bonilla both Friday and Saturday nights. He was about as great as my mother would be if she played baseball. I think he had only one hit in both games combined. If he had more than that, I missed it.

I tell you what, the one hit I know he had was nothing exciting. I should have probably taken my potty break while Bonilla was up to bat. That way, I wouldn't have had to worry about missing an exciting play.

And talk about great — what about Cal Ripken? The guy earned the world honors for most consecutive games played at 2,216 Friday night, topping Japanese baseball great Sachio Hiragatsu. Sachio who, you ask? That's right.

My bet is only a third of the waking baseball world even knew Ripken was about to become the world champion I-show-up-to-work-every-day-and-I-play-no-matter-what guy. And only about a third of those people probably even had a clue what Hiragatsu's name was.

There was easily twice as much Japanese media there as American media. Was it an off-day for the Dodgers?

What about B.J.

Surhoff, Luis Polonia, some Devereaux guy out in left field and, of course, the great Roberto Alomar? Those guys looked lousy.

Sure, they all had great hits now and then, but what about the consistency that was supposed to make the Orioles the dark horse of major-league baseball? It flat-out was not there.

What was there? Fans — thousands of them. Twenty-eight thousand of them on Friday night and 24,000 of them on Saturday night showed up to check out Mr. Ripken and his orange birds at Kauffman Stadium.

Still not a full house — in fact, nowhere close to a full house — but definitely a whole lot more crowded than it has been lately at the "K."

Speaking of fans — they are idiots. I never thought I would say it, but they are. When are they going to get a life and let the superstars — if that's what you want to call them — live their own?

Friday night I had an on-field press pass and so was privileged enough to sit right next to the Orioles' dugout. During batting practice, all the children and autograph hounds and crazy teen-agers wanting to wave hi to mom on national television swarmed down to the dugout.

At first, I felt sorry for the fans. They would holler "Mr. Ripken, Mr. Alomar, Bobby, Brady" — all to no avail. Their words fell on deaf ears.

When Ripken would even advance in their direction — just to pick up a tar rag, mind you — the screams went wild. Then he would walk away, as if perfect silence surrounded him.

Like I said — at first, I felt sorry for the fans. But by the end of the game, I was definitely sympathizing with the guys on the field.

First, the Orioles TV station was doing a pregame show on the field. After being interviewed, Billy Ripken stood up to enter the dugout.

All of a sudden, a woman leaped over and said, "Brady, can you get so-and-so for me?" Brady? This person definitely had her personalities mixed up — especially if you've ever seen Brady Anderson and Billy Ripken. They look nothing alike.

He was offended — wouldn't you be? Then, after the game was over, Cal did one little short curtain call, and then the Orioles' dugout cleared as the guys all headed into the locker room. But still the shouts and hollers came from desperate fans in the stands — "When's Cal coming out?" or "Can you get Cal's autograph for me?"

And because I was next to the dugout and on the field, I must have looked important to most of the fans, because they kept trying to gain my attention. "Ma'am, can you go get Cal for us?"

Over and over again the requests came. I ignored them — just like the players had before the game.

My sympathy no longer lay with the fans. I felt sorry for the Riplekens and the Andersons of the world. If you talk to one fan, you have to talk to them all. Who knows where the line will end?

Definitely not outside the locker-room doors. The line was even longer there.

Wildcat aiming for Olympic gold

Darren Whitley
staff reporter

K-State's Wanita Dykstra was the first person to high jump more than 6'3-1/2" in Canada in the last 10 years. She was a high-school student when she reached that mark.

She was lost in her own success as a girl-wonder at the time, she said.

"I did not have a clue. I had not trained. I had not done anything. I was just jumping high and having fun. It seemed easy," she said.

After high school, she attended the University of Toronto, where jumping lost its ease and charm, she said.

"When I was in Toronto I lost focus of what I really wanted to do. When I was in Toronto it was not easy anymore," she said.

She left Toronto after only one year to attend K-State to get away and focus on track, she said.

Dykstra, who knows just enough French to order from a menu in Quebec, said, "When I came down here on my recruiting trip, I just knew this was it. This was where I was going to fit in best."

She had some adapting to do once she arrived in the Sunflower State. Dykstra familiarized herself with the English measurement system and gauged her success with a metric measuring tape.

Dykstra said she has more in common with her boyfriend from England than she does with her American teammates. Teammates kid her about her Australian-like accent when she says "eh" to ask a question, she said.

Dykstra is pursuing her Olympic dreams and taking on a Kansas accent. She is the first of six children to go away to college.

Back home in St. Catharines,

Ontario, her parents run a successful antique shop.

Dykstra admires her four brothers, who all played sports.

"I want to impress my brothers," she said about her quest.

Dykstra does not have to jump much higher to make the Canadian Olympic team, though. She has to improve her jump by only 1 centimeter to meet the A Standard in Canada. That is a jump of 6'3-1/2", she said.

That is a significant difference from what her training partner, K-State's Gwen Wentland, is expected to jump in order to make the U.S. Olympic Team.

"The jumping is a lot lower back home than it is here," Dykstra said.

The United States has a strong high-school and college system that supports athletics more than Canada does, Dykstra said.

"You guys (Americans) just mass-produce your athletes," she said.

The majority of strong high jumpers comes from the United States, Britain and Germany, Dykstra said.

Dykstra appears to be a sure lock for the team even if no one in Canada makes the A Standard, since she has already made the B Standard. Each nation is allowed to enter one person in each Olympic competition as long as the person has met the B Standard.

Right now, Dykstra is the best Canadian jumper, but the decision is a political one that may have nothing to do with her ability, K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"It may just come down to the whim of somebody who is making that decision, who may not have anything to do with the sport. They may be a politician," he said.

"They do not know anything about the high jump or the sport whatsoever. They may be making a blanket statement that they are not taking anyone who has not made the A Standard."

"It is hard for us to understand, because our selection process is a self-selection process," he said. "You go to the trials, and you select yourself. Ninety-nine percent of the other places in the world, you are selected."

► 1996 U.S. OPEN

Jones masters monster for win

Associated Press

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. — Just when it seemed like no one could handle the monster known as Oakland Hills, Steve Jones, a player out of the game two years ago, mastered its brutal finishing hole to win the U.S. Open on Sunday.

Player after player turned into the fearsome five finishing holes at Oakland Hills with a chance to win, and player after player faded, none as badly as Davis Love III and Tom Lehman.

But Jones, who missed nearly three years on the tour after a dirt-bike accident injured the ring finger on his left hand, shot a sturdy 69 on Sunday to finish at 2-under-par 278, a stroke ahead of Lehman and Love.

"That one-foot putt was probably the longest putt I ever had to make in my life," Jones said about his tap-in for par on No. 18.

Jones, who only got into the Open by winning a playoff in a sectional qualifier, said victory was "not in my wildest dreams, believe me."

He was the first sectional qualifier to win the Open since Jerry Pate in 1976.

"The last 24 hours I was so nervous my gut was just wrenching," Jones said.

Both Love and Lehman had a chance at a playoff — or to win outright. But both faltered on No. 18, the hardest hole on the course throughout the tournament.

First Love three-putted from 20 feet, missing a 3-footer as he desperately tried for the Father's Day victory for his dad, the golf teacher and best friend killed eight years ago in a plane crash.

"I don't know what to say," Love said. "I thought I hit a good putt at 18. It didn't roll down there."

Then Lehman, playing with Jones, drove into the bunker at 18 and missed a 15-foot par putt that could have put him in the playoff.

"Tom got a bad break when that ball kicked into the bunker," Jones said. "That relaxed me a little."

"To get to 18 tied is what the Open is all about," Lehman said, "especially on a great finishing hole like this one."

K-State won't censor Web

Kris Bethea
staff writer

Censorship on the Internet is a hot topic of concern, not only across the United States, but at K-State as well.

With court cases, free-speech concerns and high schools worrying about students locating inappropriate material over the Internet, K-State has decided to develop a policy for acceptable use of e-mail and the World Wide Web.

"We want to get ahead of the game," Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finances, said.

"We're concerned about what we've been reading and hearing, and we wanted to have a policy in place before anything happened."

The largest part will be the standards for official K-State Web pages.

These pages have the K-State header and footer, Schellhardt said. It is this area that needs to be watched in order to protect K-State.

"K-State wants to promote free expression and free speech but doesn't want to get sued for it," John Streeter, director of information systems, said. "Official K-State Web pages have every right to be censored."

Official K-State pages represent K-State and are associated with the University, Streeter said.

Personal Web pages are a different issue.

"We need much looser standards for personal Web pages," Ken Conrow,

Safe school surfing

With the ban lifted and Internet access increasing, many Kansas high-school administrations are facing a future of limiting students access to certain sites that might not be in the students' best interests — such as pornographic and violent websites. USD 305, a Salina school district, has adopted rules for appropriate Internet use area schools may look to in the near future.

- Use the computer to send and access educational material.
- No profane, abusive or impolite language should be used to communicate nor should materials be accessed that are not in line with the rules of appropriate use. A good rule to follow is never view, send or access materials that you would not want your teachers or parents to see.
- School personnel may review communications to ensure that students are using the system responsibly.
- Signing onto Listservs, UseNet news and discussion groups is only allowed with permission from your teacher.
- Students should never download and/or install any commercial software, shareware or freeware unless directed to do so by school personnel.
- Students will be held accountable for their actions and for loss of privileges if rules are violated.

SCOTT M. LADD/Collegian

interim director of Computing and Network Services, said.

"They are the product of individuals."

Individuals have opinions, and K-State does not want to oppress personal opinions, he said.

Freedom of speech and the First Amendment are important issues when making any decisions regarding policy for Internet use, Conrow said.

On June 12, a three-judge federal appeals court panel in Philadelphia issued a unanimous ruling in favor of free speech on the Internet.

They issued a preliminary injunction enjoining the Communications Decency Act as an unconstitutional restriction on freedom of speech.

"They struck it down pretty hard," Tweed Ross, director of technology service for the College of Education, said.

"Of course it will go all the way to the Supreme Court.

"All three judges slapped it pretty hard, saying it was a clear violation of the First Amendment."

World Wide Web pages are like newspapers, Streeter said.

"It presents a unique environment, such as when books first got published and stories started getting printed," he said.

Streeter said the best or worst part of making personal Web pages is there is no editor to edit them.

He said this can be good or bad, depending on context and content.

"A person can communicate ideas to the world," he said.

"They can say it the way they want to say it, and no one can tell them not to."

Conrow does not believe it is CNS's job to be a watchdog for the publishing of personal Web pages.

"What we want to do at CNS is avoid acting as policemen, judges or censors," Conrow said.

"We just don't feel qualified to do that."

Instead, when something happens and someone complains, Conrow said CNS will pass the buck to the appropriate faculty grievance committee.

When it comes to using the Internet and what is right or wrong for school use, Ross does not have any answers.

"In fact, I've got more questions than I have answers," Ross said. "My only worry is that this will someday shut down a tremendous resource."

Various committees at K-State are deliberating a policy, Streeter said.

"We're going to do the best we can to develop a good policy," he said.

"If we can't come up with a good policy or one that doesn't make any sense, we won't do it."

JERRY AND CINDY SCHULTZ, who are walking across America, address the audience at the Liverpool concert Friday.

Habitat dedicates home

Myliissa Blankenship
staff reporter

Habitat for Humanity dedicated its second Manhattan home Saturday.

The organization's newest homeowner is Valerie Zamichieli, an office assistant at University Counseling Services in Lafene Health Center.

Speaking at the dedication, Zamichieli said owning her own home had been a dream for a long time and thanked Habitat for making that dream a reality.

Jerry and Cindy Schultz also attended.

They are walking across America to celebrate the 20th anniversary of Habitat for Humanity and raise funds and awareness for Habitat.

The Schultzes have retired from their jobs to do this walk.

Jerry Schultz said it is difficult being away from his three children, even though all of them are grown.

Being away from their family is not the only difficulty the Schultzes have faced during their trek.

The couple have cases of sunburn across the bridges of their nose, and Cindy has recently developed blisters on her feet.

"But we're going to finish this," Jerry Schultz said. "We have a pact. If one of us can't walk anymore, the other will push them in a wheelbarrow — whatever it takes."

It costs approximately $35,000 to build each house. This money pays for materials and land, but most of the labor is provided by volunteers.

Recipients of each house are required to put in many hours of labor as well, either on their own house or on other community service projects.

In Zamichieli's case, she was required to work on her house for 200 hours.

Local schools regulate students' Internet access

■ Manhattan, Salina schools have developed a policy for Internet use

Kris Bethea
staff writer

Elementary and secondary schools are concerned about inappropriate materials being easily accessible over the Internet.

Problems arise because it is easy to locate inappropriate materials, such as pornography, sexually explicit materials, information about drugs, alcoholic beverages and hate organizations, said Tweed Ross, director of technology services for the College of Education.

"You want kids to maintain the ability to search and find information on the Internet, but by the same token you have a responsibility," Ross said.

That responsibility is to make certain these children and teen-agers do not access inappropriate materials, he said.

"The Internet offers tremendous potential and opportunities to teach and learn," Clark Reinke, associate superintendent of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said.

"So we are going to be proactive in teaching responsible use and supervising the students using the Internet."

Ross said there are electronic safeguards that can be used to try to keep youngsters out of inappropriate materials. Surf Watch, Net Nanny and Cyberdog are just a few types of software available.

"However, kids are sharp enough these days to get in the back door," Reinke said.

With this in mind, USD 383 schools have developed a policy for the use of the Internet in school.

The policy is printed in all student handbooks, and the faculty and staff review this policy with the students.

Salina public schools also adopted a policy of Internet usage.

"We talk more about what we can do rather than a lot of 'don't do this, don't do that,'" Gary Norris, superintendent of Salina USD 305, said.

"The policy basically talks about using the Internet and electronic mail for academic purposes."

The policy calls the usage of the Internet a privilege rather than a right.

The students must show responsibility for the equipment and utilize the access properly.

Parents of students in Salina are required to sign a permission agreement which clears the school of any responsibility for students accessing objectionable material while using school computers.

Rules of appropriate use are available with the policy and the permission agreement.

The rules discuss various areas of concern such as the use of profane language, downloading software, ID use, and signing onto mailservers, news and discussion groups, Norris said.

Norris said the first rule is to use the computer, the Internet and e-mail in a way that benefits yourself, your education, your class, your school and your community.

The final rule notes that students will be held accountable for their actions and for the loss of privileges if the rules for appropriate use are violated.

"We as teachers have the responsibility to teach appropriate use," Reinke said.

K-State Theatre opens productions for summer audiences

'The Foreigner' keeps audience laughing continuously

Cynthia Fitzgerald
staff reporter

"The Foreigner," written by Larry Shue, perhaps should be called "The Foreigners."

As the labyrinthian plot unravels, all the characters in the play discover they are foreigners.

The zany comedy, which opened Thursday night in Nichols Theatre, kept the audience in a continuous state of laughter.

The humor revolves around Charlie, a shy British science fiction novel proofreader who comes to a backwoods fishing lodge in a small Georgia town with his friend, Staff Sgt. Froggy LeSuer, a British army explosives expert with an Australian accent.

Jason Miller, who portrays Froggy, uses an Australian accent so convincingly it could make a native Australian homesick.

Froggy decides to tell everyone at the lodge that Charlie is a foreigner who does not speak or understand any English. Froggy thinks this masquerade will keep Charlie from having to talk to people.

Shad Bever, who portrays Charlie, intensifies his fabulous performance later in the play, when he starts speaking a made-up foreign language and has to pretend to learn English.

Betty, played by Jill Huguet, is the backwoods fishing lodge's owner and a very backwoods old southern woman.

Huguet maintains a good balance for a character that could easily turn cartoonish. She delivers her lines with spontaneous life and a southern dialect that could cut through butter.

With splendid direction by Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech, each cast member of this production gives a

'Arkansaw Bear' delivers messages through comedy

Adults may be teary-eyed, and children may have a better understanding of how to deal with the death of a loved one when they leave the play "Arkansaw Bear" at Nichols Theatre.

The hour-long children's play opened Saturday offering a light-hearted message — for every ending, there is a beginning.

The show is filled with rhymes and riddles and the cast interacts with the children in the audience, evoking a feeling of belonging.

The story is about a little girl named Tish, played innocently by Jennifer Grace, who doesn't understand why her grandfather has to die, and the World's Greatest Dancing Bear, played heartily by Shad Bever, who is nearing the end of his life.

The look of the bears is left to a child's imagination. There are no bear suits being worn. Instead, costume designer Marla Day created bright, colorful costumes for the characters.

The bear performs several snappy dances for Tish by choreographer Roxanne Bartush-Shea.

The simple fairy-tale set, and the special technical effects designed by John Uthoff, help bring this story to life.

There are props dropping down from the ceiling and secret doors on the stage that create surprising visuals, especially fun for the younger audience.

But along with special effects comes the risk of it not always happening when it's supposed to.

Director Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor in speech, works a lot with improvisation during the rehearsals of her productions.

It's a good thing, because a few

New director to lead journalism school

Heather Classen
staff reporter

Colleagues love him, his family supports him, and he is ready to take action.

Paul Parsons started his five-year term as director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications and left the position of associate director on June 16.

Parsons came to K-State in 1985 on the offer of the Seaton professorship. In 1989 he became a tenured professor and associate director of the journalism school. He was awarded the Outstanding Teacher Award in 1989.

"Paul Parsons is the perfect person for the position. We could've conducted a national search and found no one better for this position," Charles Lubbers, assistant professor in the journalism school, said.

Carol Outcrop, the former director, did not want to serve as director for another term. She returned to teaching.

"Paul Parsons is the perfect man for the job, having served as associate director for seven years and on several University committees. He knows the school well," said Paul Prince, associate journalism professor.

Parsons said he grew up in a public media environment because his father was the superintendent of schools in Little Rock, Ark.

Parsons said he watched with interest as the journalists and photographers covered the activities of the superintendent.

Parsons said he is not sure if he will teach while he is director. Teaching is a big part of Parsons' life, but he considers being the director a service to the school, he said.

"I have mixed feelings about it," Parsons said. "I'm leaving, in a sense, personal preferences and aiming for development goals."

Parsons said his goals, which focus on furthering faculty, student and program development, include bringing the photo lab into current technology.

He also wants to help professors obtain tenure positions, recruit students from high schools and keep computer labs up-to-date. He said he has appointed Larry Lamb, a non-tenured assistant professor, as assistant director to help reach these goals.

The journalism school faculty has thoughts about what kind of leader Parsons could become.

"I think he is a participatory leader. He is very open and nonauthoritative," Lubbers said.

Parsons said he sees additional aspects a director must have.

"I believe in a participatory form of faculty governance, but the director must be the decision-maker, not merely a discussion leader," Parsons said.

Parsons said he has agreed to serve a five-year term but is not sure what will occur after that.

"What is exciting about becoming director of the school is that this is a school with a very good faculty already, and we have a sense of momentum that is gaining attention in JMC education," he said.

We could've conducted a national search and found no one better for this position.

Cops get new patrol car

The K-State Police got a new car to replace two cars with more than 100,000 engine miles.

The campus police expect to begin changing the fleet of seven cars to the new design in the next month.

The 1996 Ford Crown Victoria is currently testing a new design for the campus police.

It is a change for the campus police, whose cars have only had a shield decal on the doors in the past.

Director of Campus Police Ronnie Grice said the advantage of the new design is it makes the campus police more visible.

Campus officers are thrilled about the way the new car looks, he said. Robert Mellgren, captain, said even though it is a new car, there is no favorite patrol car to drive, because they are all the same inside.

Grice said the car's design is the only thing different from the other campus police cars.

Everything Grice has heard about it has been positive.

"President (Jon) Wefald told me, 'It is the coolest police car I have seen since I have been here,'" Grice said.

The University was able to save money on the cars by piggy-backing onto a highway-patrol bid, Grice said.

The advantage of piggy-backing was the highway patrol may buy as many as 200 cars at a time, he said. K-State bought the new car for $17,000.

AFTER THE COUNTDOWN, Jesamine Jones, Manhattan resident, lets go of her balloon during Juneteenth festivities. Children released helium balloons with their names and addresses attached.

Rain fails to dampen Juneteenth festivities

R.J. Diepenbrock
staff writer

Even as the rain steadily fell over Long's Park Saturday, the spirits of those who attended the Juneteenth Celebration remained high as they congregated under tents, talking and playing games.

Cornell Mayfield, a co-organizer of the event, said the day represented freedom. "It's a black Fourth of July," Mayfield said. "It's like a community picnic."

The afternoon began with Mayor Sydney Carlin reading the Juneteenth Proclamation, followed by a balloon release by 20 children.

Attached to each balloon was a card with a child's name and an explanation of the event. The hope was that these balloons would be found in other towns and communities and be able to tell someone about Juneteenth.

The celebration arose from the freeing of slaves two years after the Emancipation Proclamation was signed into law on January 1, 1863.

On June 19, 1865, the final slaves were freed from states such as Texas. Because of their freedom, these former slaves began celebrating their independence every June. By combining June and nineteenth, the word Juneteenth was created. But for many years, it remained a quiet backyard picnic.

Seven years ago, Manhattan had its first Juneteenth Celebration.

"It's a time to get together," Tina Nash said. Nash, who won a watermelon during the hour rain, has been attending since it began.

Rynai Jones, who has attended five times, said the day means being proud of her heritage. "I come to see a lot of black people from the community celebrating," she said.

Velma Patterson, who owns a clothing store in Oden and peddles her wares throughout the day, said she owes much to the celebration.

"I began my business because of this day," Patterson, who attended the celebration for the third year, said.

She said she began by working out of her home and selling the clothes she made to people attending the picnic. Success followed, and she soon was able to open a store.

"You learn something new, even when you think you know everything," Patterson said about attending the celebration.

Karen Scroggin, who works for Patterson and is a 1993 graduate of K-State, said the day was about freedom and being part of the United States while still being individuals.

The Manhattan AIDS group was also at the celebration, representing Project Reality.

Shirley Hudley, director of Project Reality, said the group was there to educate. Education they gave stemmed from old African proverbs.

The food was provided by Jerry Hudley, who operates a catering service. Barbecued ribs were his specialty, and he sold sizes ranging from a child's plate to a rack of ribs.

"It's a day that people can come together, people that don't normally get together," Jerry Hudley said.

"This celebration strengthens the brotherhood and sisterhood in the community," he said. "Helps people to understand our heritage."

Job's Daughters fight for women's respect

Lori Richter
staff reporter

Reverence for God, love for country and respect for others are three qualities that brought together more than 250 young women last Thursday-Sunday at Manhattan Holiday Inn and Holidome.

Job's Daughters, a masonic-related organization for girls between the ages of 11 and 20, met for its annual state meeting.

The weekend consisted of scholarship pageants, officer installation ceremonies, informational meetings and speakers.

The group teaches women to build character through self-confidence, individual talents, leadership, friendships and service.

Melinda Cortright, junior in apparel and textile marketing, has been active in Job's Daughters for more than seven years.

"My dad got me involved with Job's Daughters after he became involved with the Masons," Cortright said.

"I remember the first activity I went to was a parade that Job's Daughters was having," she said. "Everyone was so friendly, warm and responsive."

Cortright said along with developing lasting friendships she has gained many leadership and organizational qualities from her involvement with Job's Daughters.

Nichole Stuck, junior in elementary education, also said she agreed her leadership and speaking skills have improved due to her involvement with Job's Daughters.

Stuck, who joined when she was 12 years old, said the group has bimonthly meetings that give members the opportunity to build skills preparing them for social and business settings.

"You learn to conduct professional business meetings and get up in front of groups of people to talk and give presentations. You also plan several philanthropic activities," Stuck said.

The organization has chapters in 40 states and is also internationally located in Canada, Australia, Brazil and the Philippines.

Judith Bavister, Grand Supreme Guardian of National Job's Daughters, was an honored guest at the weekend meeting. Bavister lives in Australia but has been traveling the globe for one year serving as the national president of Job's Daughters.

"I have been all over, but this is my first trip to Kansas," she said. She has been involved with Job's Daughters for 39 years.

"I have learned that wherever I go, and whatever kind of people I meet, no matter how different they are, the love and friendship is exactly the same," Bavister said.

Bavister also said it has been interesting to see how the standard of living varies in each country. "While I was in Brazil I asked the taxi driver to open the trunk to put my luggage in," Bavister said. "He opened the trunk, and I was shocked to see a dead beast covered in blood."

Bavister said through her traveling experiences she has learned to appreciate different cultures, customs and beliefs.

Cortright said each year a national meeting brings together all the organizations in the country.

"I was lucky enough to go to the one last year in Brazil," Cortright said. "It was amazing to see the different languages and lifestyles represented there."

Cortright said the convention was a memorable experience.

"It is wonderful to see how all of those involved with Job's Daughters are different, yet we all shared a closeness, and it brought us all together," she said.

Bike-seat hurler injures student, evades cops

Allison Woodall
staff reporter

Students walking on campus last Monday were forced to duck flying bicycle seats.

Lt. Dave Johnson of the K-State Police said 10 to 12 bicycle seats were taken from bike racks by the K-State Student Union and Denison, Ackert and Durland halls. The seats were thrown at pedestrians walking on paths at 5 p.m. through Memorial Stadium.

Vandy Paul, senior in computer engineering, was hit by a seat.

"I was walking along when I felt something knock into me," Paul said. "I didn't know what happened right away. Then I noticed I couldn't move my arm."

Paul said she stood there in shock. A police officer who had been in the area investigating the seats saw her and asked if she was OK.

"I was just standing there not really even knowing what was happening. Then I saw a cop. I thought, 'Whoa, that's pretty quick. I didn't even do anything yet,'" Paul said.

Paul went to Lafene Health Center the next day and was told everything was fine, but her wrist would be sore for a while.

Police have no suspects in the case. Johnson said the majority of the seats were found in the grass by Kedzie Hall and Memorial Stadium and returned to their owners.

Doug Shrack, senior in elementary education, has not recovered his bicycle seat. He has continued to ride his bike to class.

"This might even be good for me. Riding standing up really builds up the leg muscles," Shrack said.

"People look at me like I'm a moron, and everyone keeps cautioning me not to sit down. So far I haven't forgotten," he said.

All the seats taken were quick-release models built to make transporting the bicycles in motor vehicles easier. Locks are available to connect the seat to the bike frame. None of the seats had locks.

Stephanie Bartel, junior in pre-health professions, said she does not plan to buy a lock for her returned bicycle seat.

"I think it was kind of a one-time deal,"

Bartel said. "Kids were probably outside just feeling ornery with nothing better to do."

Siendou Ouattara, graduate student in engineering, said he will probably buy a seat lock.

Ouattara's bike was new, and it was the first time he had ridden it on campus. Paul said she would like to confront the person who hit her.

"I'd ask them what the point was," Paul said.

"Were they trying to hit me, or were they just throwing things? I'd also tell them what a stupid act it was. It could have hit my head and killed me."

security and that students can no longer pay tuition with credit cards.

The SAC is trying to stress to business executives and officials across the state that higher education is important to the future of Kansas, Hansen said.

Hansen said he is really interested in getting a unified health plan for all regents schools.

"The higher the number of premiums, the lower the cost to the students," Hansen said.

The SAC is interested in overturning the decision that banned student lobbying.

"It has kind of handicapped the universities a lot," Gray Montgomery, student body president at the University of Kansas, said. "The more we can express our views, the better."

Hansen said, "I want to see the state take more responsibility in financial situations so that we do not have to constantly increase fees for students."

The committee is also trying to convince the board that a new system for teacher evaluations is necessary.

"We need one form for all of the regents schools," Montgomery said.

Welsh said, "Campus security has become a hot issue since the murder of a Pittsburgh State University student."

Many regents schools do not have a student escort service like K-State's.

"K-State has become the model for that program," Welsh said.

Tuition is always a topic, because it is decided upon on a yearly basis.

"I want to see that there is stability in the increases, something that the students can depend on," Hansen said. "We know that tuition is going to go up, and we're not going to stop it, but let's try to do it at a controlled rate."

The SAC is challenged every year to effectively communicate for 80,000 students and the regents.

"We are there so that the students don't have a split message," Hansen said. "Without this board, students just might."

estimates. She also pointed out the annexation of K-State occurred in 1994, the year for which the update was issued.

"For some reason they did not include the K-State annexation," Eric Cattell, senior planner in the Community Development Department, said.

Cattell said he files a Boundary Annexation Survey form each year. Apparently, the Census Bureau overlooked it.

Stoddard said the Census Bureau has been cutting back on how much attention they pay to special updates.

She said they have been forced to have less accurate updates because of government cutbacks.

"The thing we want to make clear is that these people live in the City of Manhattan and they use our streets," she said.

Because a population adjustment of this magnitude does not happen frequently, it was important to the city, which began the formal process in mid-May, Stoddard said.

link the University with the economic development efforts.

"We need to attract new businesses or home-grow businesses that can be linked or are linked to the University," she said.

Jeff Peterson, former K-State student body president, said he decided to run because of the importance of having strong representatives for Manhattan and K-State.

tomorrow, where will he find the money to make the changes?"

Khrantsova also worried about broken promises.

"They always say nice things — all of them," she said. "My biggest concern is that they remember their promises when they get to power."

Kolonosky said he did not believe Yeltsin had lived up to his promises for the last term.

"Yeltsin has done very little," Kolonosky said. "In this country, we look at the incumbent's record. If someone were to really scrutinize his record, he has had long periods of absence."

However, Kolonosky's prediction for the election agreed with Khrantsova's and Korenman's.

As Kolonosky said, a close race is preferable to no election at all.

the road of reform."

According to Kolonosky, Zyuganov was getting the strongest support from rural residents, because these people have not reaped the benefits of reform.

Korenman said communism is most popular among rural residents and the elderly.

"It's mostly old people who are now in a terrible situation," he said. "They are so poor they can't even buy bread."

Kolonosky said 50 percent of Russians live in poverty.

To give perspective, he said 50 percent of Americans have no net worth.

Election promises are another important concern for Russians. Both parties have promised large reforms if elected.

"Yeltsin talks about the big changes now when he gives promises to people," Korenman said. "But
